BALTIMORE, Sunday, June 27.

On Saturday afternoon, at Green Mount Cemetery, the remains of JOHN WILKES BOOTH, with those of the others of the family brought from Harford County, received sepulture. All the deceased members of the BOOTH family in America now lie side by side, including JUNIUS BRUTUS and his father RICHARD, who died in 1850 at the age of 76 years. The well-known monument to the elder BOOTH has been erected in Green Mount, and in addition to the inscription commemorative of JUNIUS BRUTUS BOOTH there has been added on the side of the shaft previously left blank, the following: "To the memory of the children of JUNIUS BRUTUS BOOTH and MARY ANN BOOTH:—John Wilkes, Frederick, Elizabeth, Mary Ann, Henry Byron." At the interment on Saturday afternoon the remains of JOHN WILKES BOOTH, inclosed in a handsome burial case, were conveyed from the vault of the undertaker by pall-bearers chosen from the theatrical profession who knew the deceased, at the especial request of the family. About fifty persons, including relatives and friends of the family, were present at the burial, the larger portion being ladies. The ceremonies were simple and unostentatious, Rev. FLEMING JAMES, Assistant Minister of St. Luke's Hospital, New-York, officiating. Near him in a group stood the aged mother of the deceased, the elder sister, ROSALIE, and the brothers JUNIUS BRUTUS and EDWIN.

BRAZIL AND PARAGUAY.

President Lopez to the Allies—He Determines to Continue the War, Without Regard of Consequences.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 27.

The following is the answer of President LOPEZ to the summons by the Allies to surrender:

HEADQUARTERS IN PARAGUAY, Dec. 24, 1868—9 P. M.

The Marshal-President of the Republic of Paraguay might well hold himself excused from giving a written reply to your Excellencies, the Generals-in-Chief of the Allied armies engaged in war with the nation over which he presides, because of the tone and language unusual and inconsistent with the honor of a soldier and the dignity of a Chief Magistrate, with which your Excellencies have taken occasion to convey to me the intimation to lay down my arms within the space of twelve hours, in order to terminate so prolonged a struggle, threatening to throw upon my head the blood which has been already spilled, and which has yet to flow if I do not consent to the laying down of arms, and holding me responsible in person before my country, the nations which your Excellencies represent, and the civilized world. Nevertheless, I choose to impose upon myself this duty, rendering thus a tribute to that same blood, so generously poured out, as well by my people as by those with whom they fight, as also to the sentiment of religion, humanity and civilization, which your Excellencies invoke in your demand. These same sentiments are precisely those which influenced me more than two years since to rise above all the official discourtesy with which the elected ruler of my country has been treated in the war. I sought then at Zatayceora, in a conference with his Excellency the General-in-Chief of the Allied armies and President of the Argentine Republic, Brigadier-General Don BARTOLOMÉ MITRE, the reconciliation of the four sovereign States of South America, which had already begun to destroy themselves in a notable manner, and yet my initiative and most earnest effort met with no other reply than disregard and silence upon the part of the Allied Governments, and new and sanguinary battles upon the part of their armed representatives, as your Excellencies can bear witness. Since then I have seen more clearly the tendency of the war of the Allies against the existence of the Republic of Paraguay, and deploring the blood which has been shed, and so many years of strife, I was silent, and placing the fate of my country and her generous sons in the hands of the God of nations, fought her enemies with the loyalty and earnestness I have shown and, I am still ready to continue fighting until the same God and our arms decide the definite fate of the cause.

Your Excellencies are good enough to advise me of the knowledge which you possess of the resources which I can actually command, believing that I also am aware of the numerical force of the Allied armies and their of resources, every day more threatening. I have no such information but I have the experience of four years, during which this numerical force and these resources have never prevailed against the self-denial and courage of the Paraguayan soldier, who fights with the resolution of an honorable citizen and a Christian man, that a narrow grave may open for him in his country before he will see her in any manner humiliated.

Your Excellencies have had the goodness to remind me that the blood poured out at Hohrah and Abay should have decided me to avoid the bloodshed of the 21st of the current month, but your Excellencies forget, without doubt, that these same actions have demonstrated in advance how certain is the dependence which I place on the self-denial of my compatriots, and that each drop of blood which falls to the earth is a new obligation to those who survive. And before such an example can my poor head be affrighted by the threat, so very unchivalrous, (permit me to call it so,) which your Excellencies have deemed it your duty to convey to me?

Your Excellencies have no right to accuse me before the Republic of Paraguay, my country, because I have defended her. I do defend her, and will yet defend her. She has imposed upon me this duty, and it is my glory to fulfill it to the last extremity; and, for the rest, leaving my deeds to history, I have an account only to my God, and if it be that blood must still be shed, He will take note of it, and of where the responsibility rests. I, for my part, am still disposed to treat for the termination of the war upon bases equally honorable to all the belligerents, but I am not disposed to hear one word as to the laying down of my arms, called for by your Excellencies, in order to treat for peace.

Thus, in my turn, I believe I comply with my imperative duty to religion, humanity and civilization, on the one hand, and with that which I owe to the unanimous cry which I have just heard from my friends, chiefs, officers and troops, to whom I have communicated the demand of your Excellencies, and with that which I owe to my own name and honor.

I ask your Excellencies to excuse my not quoting the date and hour of your notification, inasmuch as it is here none, and was received in my lines at 1½ o'clock this morning.

God keep your Excellencies many years.

(Signed.) FRANCISCO S. LOPEZ.

To their Excellencies, the Marshal Marquis DE CAXIAS, Colonel, Major HENRY CASTRO, and Brigadier-Generals JOHN A. GELLI and IVES.

Visit of the Vice-President to Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE, Sunday, June 27.

The Vice-President and Mrs. COLFAX left this city on Saturday morning for Newport, where they are the guests of THOS. COGGESHALL, Esq., an old friend of Mr. COLFAX. During the day they visited various places of interest, including Fort Adams, where they were received by General HURT and staff with the Vice-President's salute from the guns of the fort. From Fort Adams the party were rowed in the Government barge across to Lime Rocks Light-house, and made a surprise call on Miss IDA LEWIS, to whom the Vice-President expressed the gratitude of the nation for her noble heroism, as manifested in saving eleven lives at various times at the risk of her own. To-day Mr. and Mrs. COLFAX attended church in the morning and afternoon. To-morrow morning they will leave Newport for Providence, where the Vice-President will have a reception of an hour in the City Hall, and then proceed by the midday train to Westerly, the residence of Hon. N. P. DIXON.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

RICHMOND, Va., June 27.—The funeral of KELLEY, who was shot by Captain CALAGHAN, of the Police, was attended this afternoon by a large crowd of citizens, notwithstanding a severe thunder-storm prevailed. The affair assumes a political cast, from KELLEY's prominence as a Conservative politician.

CINCINNATI, June 27.—The inward-bound train on the Marietta Railroad struck an omnibus today while crossing the track at Ernest's Station, shattering it and seriously injuring the driver, and slightly injuring six passengers. There were sixteen passengers inside and one on top the omnibus.

WASHINGTON.

The Republican Split in Tennessee—The Democrats to Vote with the Senator Wing—Andrew Johnson after the Senatorship—Economy in the Public Expenditure—Witnesses of the Century.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sunday, June 27.

The political situation in Tennessee is attracting much attention here, and the condition of affairs in the Republican Party is being brought to the consideration of the President and Cabinet. The question of the enfranchisement of the citizens now disfranchised for disloyalty, is the principal issue before the people, and upon that question the Republican Party has split. Both parties have taken ground in favor of enfranchisement. The Senter Party in favor of immediate and unconditional, and the Stokes Party in favor of gradual enfranchisement by the removal of disabilities by the Legislature, as is now done by Congress under the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment. The most important new feature of the canvass is that the Democrats have fully decided not to nominate a candidate of their own, but to cast a solid vote for SENTER. They hope thereby to secure the Legislature, which will enable them to carry out their policy and to send ANDY JOHNSON to the Senate in FOWLER's place, to which end ANDY JOHNSON is heartily cooperating. BROWNLOW, strange as it may seem, and notwithstanding his bigoted and proscriptive course in the Senate last Spring, now cooperates with the Senter movement. His opponents claim that he does this because he and his friends are all now in office, and that if beaten their transactions in the State Government will be exposed. They further say that his personal prejudices and hates control him as usual. The latest intelligence received here indicates that the Senter movement will be pretty well swallowed up by the Democrats, and the majority of the Republicans of the State fear that its success will place the party in the position which it now occupies in Maryland.

The situation has been talked over by the President and several members of the Cabinet, but there is nothing yet to indicate which party will receive the countenance of the Administration. A majority of the Cabinet are known to prefer the success of Colonel STOKES, because they believe that with his election the supremacy of the Republican Party in the State would be maintained. There are very few appointments to be made for the State, so that not much influence can be exercised in that direction. A Supervisor of Internal Revenue will be made to-morrow by Secretary BOUTWELL and the President, which may afford some indication of the stand to be taken by the Administration. There are quite a number of Tennessee people here, urging some public recognition on the part of the President and Cabinet in behalf of one party or the other, but nothing has yet been done. From present indications it would seem that the sympathies of the Administration are with the Republicans who support STOKES, as against the coalition which supports SENTER.

STATEMENT OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The monthly debt statement for July 1 will not be delayed in consequence of the close of the fiscal year, though its showing will not be so favorable for the Government as will be the full returns for the year when received from all sources.

The currency balance yesterday was about $25,000,000, and will be about $30,000,000 by July 1. The gold certificates have increased largely and now represent about $30,000,000. The July gold interest will not appear changed off in the statement, save so much as may have been paid in advance, but there will remain in the Treasury after the interest warrants have been drawn, from $60,000,000 to $65,000,000 in gold.

The Treasury has redeemed nearly one million of three per cents. during the present month. The internal revenue receipts will be very heavy for the remaining three days of this month, and the total for the year will undoubtedly reach $158,000,000.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The statements in certain newspapers that the position of Secretary of the Navy was offered to Governor GEARY, and by him declined, or to JOHN CAMERON, Esq., are pronounced on the best authority to be wholly untrue.

ECONOMY IN THE DEPARTMENTS.

Hon. HENRY D. BARRON, Fifth Auditor, though but a short time in office, has already manifested a commendable zeal in reducing expenses to the lowest amount practicable, having due regard to justice, equity and the interests of the public service. The whole business of this office is being rearranged, and wherever practicable, expenses reduced. Latterly the allowances to assessors of internal revenue have been revised, and an equitable adjustment made by which a saving to the Treasury of $40,731 per annum is effected.

RETRENCHMENTS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The Secretary of the Treasury has decided to consolidate still further certain divisions in his office, viz.: The Revenue Cutter Service, the Marine Hospital and the Steamboat Inspection, now three separate divisions, will, on July 1, be merged into one, under the charge of Mr. DEVEREUX, now in the Revenue Cutter Division. This will dispense with from five to ten clerks. The total number of clerks dismissed from the Treasury since the beginning of the new Administration is considerably over six hundred. As an evidence of the earnestness of the Government in the matter of retrenchment and economy in the public expenditure, it can be stated that the new fiscal year will begin with a reduction in the army expenditure of $20,000,000 per annum, caused by the reduction of the force by the number of twenty thousand men. The number of civilian employes of the army, which on the first of March last was 10,000, has been reduced to 4,000, thus saving $6,000,000 per annum from that source, or altogether a reduction of $26,000,000 in the army expenditure for the next year is already a fact well accomplished. This renders it possible to bring the total army expenditure within the limit of the Appropriation bill, provided there is no protracted war.

EXECUTIVE APPOINTMENTS.

Dr. CHARLES A. FOSTER has been appointed Collector of Customs for Vicksburg, and HAMILTON TAYLOR for Fort Shieldsboro, Gulf Coast, Miss. The widow of the late incumbent was an applicant for the latter place, strongly recommended by Senators HARRIS and KELLOGG, but it was decided by Secretary BOUTWELL that women are not eligible to such offices.

J. B. MANN, Esq., of Massachusetts, has been appointed Chief Clerk of the Fifth Auditor's Office, vice T. M. SMITH, of Indiana, resigned.

NEW STEAM NAVIGATION ENTERPRISE.

An association styling itself the Mediterranean and Oriental Steam Navigation Company of New-York, and composed of HIRAM WALNSLEDON, of New-York, HENRY T. BLOW, of Missouri, W. H. GLEESON, of Florida, TRENHOLM, of South Carolina, and others, have issued a memorial, accompanied by a bill to be presented at the next session of Congress, asking the Government to aid a line of mail steamers between New-York and Norfolk, Va., and the Mediterranean ports and ports of the East by the Suez Canal. They propose to establish the line by the aid of subsidies from the Southern States, and ask a contract for fifteen years from the Post Office Department, at the rate of $12,000 per week for the carrying of the mails. It is looked upon as a purely Southern movement, and is one of the agencies by which it will be endeavored to turn the immigration tide Southward.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE.

The friends of Chief Justice CHASE are by no means pleased with the recent newspaper statements relative to his present political attitude and future political intentions. There is no authority whatever for their publication so far as he is concerned, and the talk about his siding with this party or that in the South has no foundation in fact. Mr. CHASE is engaged solely in attending to his official duties, and all prophecies and surmises as to his aspirations and ideas are pure guesses put afloat by persons intimate to his interests.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The joint stock company which erected the Young Men's Christian Association building in this city some time ago, and which is one of our finest structures outside the Government departments, announces its readiness to pay the July interest on its stock. The undertaking has been entirely successful.

CUBAN AFFAIRS—BELLIGERENT RIGHTS.

For some days several prominent Cubans holding official relations to the Revolutionary Government of Cuba have been in Washington, and had interviews with the President and several members of the Cabinet, and prominent Senators and Representatives. The assurances given them of earnest sympathy with the Cubans in their struggle for independence, and the desire to render practical aid to the cause, give their representatives in this city much satisfaction. They state that a Government agent will be sent to ascertain the strength and prospects of the revolutionists, and, if favorable, it is their opinion the belligerent rights of the Cubans will be recognized by the Government.

TONNAGE OF DANISH AND AMERICAN VESSELS.

The following is a translation of the instructions to the Danish Customs officer in behalf of the reciprocal exemption from remeasurement of Danish and United States vessels:

DEPARTMENT OF THE REVENUE, COPENHAGEN, ——, 1869.

The Government of the United States have issued orders to the effect that the measurement of Danish ships taken on or after the 1st of October, 1867, and in conformity with the rules of the law relating to the measurement of ships in Denmark, shall be acknowledged in the United States harbors; so that, in consequence, no Danish ship provided with certificates of registry and measurement shall be subject to remeasurement in the said harbors, but they shall be considered as having the tonnage indicated in the Danish certificate in the same manner, to the same extent and for the same purpose as the tonnage of the American certificate of registry is ascertained to be; that, in calculating the exception, however, that no deduction from the total tonnage is allowed for the space occupied by the crew in sailing vessels, and by the crew and the engine in steam vessels.

Therefore, and in reference to paragraph 1 (ctr.), paragraph 1(ff) of the law of March 12, 1867, relating to the measurement of ships in Denmark, ships belonging to the United States and carrying American certificates of registry shall, from the 1st of July, 1869, not be subject to remeasurement in our harbors; but the tonnage indicated in their certificates of registry shall be valid in all cases, in the same manner and to the same extent as the tonnage ascertained by the Danish certificate—the same deduction for space occupied by crew and engine as would have been made according to the Danish regulation if the ship had been Danish—having been made from the total tonnage contained in the American certificate, which corresponds to the total tonnage after Danish measurement. The above is hereby communicated to the Customs officers for their guidance; and they are requested to call the attention of the ships' officers to this regulation.

Collector GRINNELL, by direction of the Solicitor of the Treasury, will sell the steamer Virgin, now lying at Hoboken, by auction on the 26 of July next. This steamer came into the possession of the Government as a part of the assets of Mr. MAY, formerly Assistant Treasurer at New-Orleans.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN IN VIRGINIA.

Both of the political parties in Virginia are making increased efforts in the canvass, and it is generally conceded there will be a close contest. General VAN WYCK, of New-York, will start tomorrow for Fredericksburg, Richmond, and other places, to make speeches for the Wells ticket, by invitation of the Republican State Central Committee.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Reports have been received from all the national banks of New-York under the late call, and an abstract of their condition will soon be ready for publication.

THE COLORED PRINTER DOUGLASS.

The members of the Typographical Union of this city, apart from those who are employed in the Government Printing Office, have obtained 200 signatures to their address to the President of the National Typographical Union, asking him to interpose and protect them from impending evils, even though the revocation of the charter of No. 101 and the granting of a new charter be necessary to do so. Several printers from the Government Printing Office were excused from signing the address, as it set forth that that establishment was virtually out of the union, and, in printers' phrase, was "a rat office." It will be recollected that the National Union declared the colored compositor DOUGLASS a "rat," and that a majority of the union of this city a week ago prevented a vote from being taken on the application of DOUGLASS for membership.

ANOTHER INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

It has been officially announced to the British Minister at this capital that an international exhibition of the products of workmen's labor will be held at London in 1870, and Mr. THORNTON has been requested to make the matter known to the citizens of the United States, which he will proceed to do when more fully advised regarding details. The great aim of this exhibition is to develop personal labor throughout the world, and encourage an interest and pride in the works of individual creation, a matter of deep interest to employes everywhere and to society at large. There is authority for making this representation in advance of more particular details, which will soon be communicated to the American workingmen and employers.

FORTRESS MONROE.

Order of General Canby Establishing Quarantine Regulations for Hampton Roads.

FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, June 25, 1869.

The arrival in the Capes, on Tuesday last, of the schooner Mary E. Fenwick, with yellow fever on board, was duly telegraphed to General CANBY at Richmond, which caused the following order to be issued in regard to Quarantine at this port. It was received here to-day and is as follows:

GENERAL ORDERS—NO. 72.
HEADQUARTERS FIRST MILITARY DISTRICT, STATE OF VIRGINIA, RICHMOND, June 23, 1869.

In order to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases by vessels coming from infected ports the following Quarantine regulations for Hampton Roads are hereby established and will go into effect without delay:

1. All vessels having infectious or contagious diseases on board, and all vessels from ports infected with yellow fever, cholera or any contagious or infectious disease, will, before entering Hampton Roads, when from infected ports, but having no cases of sickness on board, have to moor the Rip Raps in the daytime, and anchor there at night; and when from infected ports, with cases of sickness on board, they will anchor at the yellow buoy, near the Willoughby Spit light-ship, hoist a yellow flag at the mainmast head and await inspection and orders from the Quarantine officer.

2. All vessels from ports where yellow fever, cholera or other contagious or infectious diseases prevail, but having had no cases during the passage, will be quarantined for fifteen days and thoroughly fumigated.

3. All vessels which have had yellow fever, cholera or other contagious or infectious diseases on board during the passage, or after the arrival at Quarantine, shall be quarantined for the period of fifteen days after the termination of the last case, and thoroughly fumigated.

4. The Quarantine Officer will assign vessels to the positions they will occupy while in Quarantine, and may change their position whenever stormy weather or other circumstances may render any change necessary. Vessels while undergoing Quarantine will be entirely under the control of the Quarantine Officer, and no vessel shall pass beyond or leave the place assigned it without his written permission.

5. All communications between vessels at Quarantine or between them and shore will be prevented, and no boat will be permitted to go alongside such vessel, for any purpose whatever, except under the written permission of the Quarantine Officer of the Quarantine Office, and no vessel will be allowed to discharge any portion of her cargo save by his direction and permission.

6. It will be the duty of the Quarantine Officer to board every vessel as soon as practicable after her arrival, to ascertain whether any sickness exists on board or has occurred during the voyage, and the number of cases; and if deemed expedient, the examination of the Quarantine Officer, the officers, crew or any of the passengers may be made, a complete list of whom names it will be the duty of the Captain to furnish.

7. Should it be deemed advisable to establish quarantine on any portion of the shore or waters not contiguous to be infected, it will be the duty of the Quarantine Officer to designate localities and prescribe regulations for the same.

8. Masters of vessels and pilots in charge will be held responsible for any violation of the above regulations.

9. The senior medical officer on duty at Fort Monroe will be ex officio the Quarantine Officer, and such other medical officers as may be on duty at that post, and to facilitate the execution of the foregoing order the steamer William F. Taylor will be placed under his orders.

By command of Brevet Major-General CANBY.
LOUIS V. CASSARD, A. D. C. and A. A. G.

Upon the receipt of the above order, Brevet Colonel GEORGE E. COOPER, Post Surgeon, who is the senior medical officer on duty here, issued the following instructions to pilots bringing vessels into Hampton Roads from ports south of Cape Hatteras, and from all ports declared foul or infected:

UNITED STATES QUARANTINE STATION, FORTRESS MONROE, Va., June 25, 1869.

1. In bringing in vessels which have sailed from infected ports, but which have no sickness on board, direct that a flag be hoisted at the mainmast head, and carry them, in the daytime, to the yellow buoy at the upper edge of the Middle Ground, some two miles distant in a westerly direction from the reef buoy placed at the entrance to Elizabeth River; anchor there, in good holding ground, out of the way of vessels passing to or from the James River, and await the inspection of the Quarantine Officer. Should they come in during the night, anchor them near the Rip Raps, and keep at anchor until visited by the Quarantine Officer.

2. Anchor all vessels with yellow fever, cholera, small-pox or other contagious disease on board, on the south edge of the shore, Willoughby light-ship bearing north by east, hoist a yellow flag at the mainmast head and await the inspection of the Quarantine Officer. Should the sea, however, be heavy, or the weather very threatening, do not await the Quarantine Officer, but bring the vessel immediately to the inner Quarantine ground, near the yellow buoy, and there await inspection.

3. Instruct all masters of vessels that no communication with the shore will be permitted until the Quarantine Officer shall have declared the vessels clean and free from disease, and that all communication with infected vessels will be carried on only through the Quarantine boat and under charge of the Quarantine Officer. GEORGE E. COOPER,
Surgeon United States Army, Superintendent of Quarantine.

Colonel COOPER is an old and experienced army surgeon, and has spent some ten years of his life on the frontier of Texas and in Mexico. He is thoroughly conversant with all the contagious diseases peculiar to that climate, and will attend to the Quarantine duties here in person.

The tug William F. Taylor, Captain HUDDINS, which is ordered to report to him for this duty, is an iron steamer belonging to the State, and is used during the Winter by the oyster inspector. She was the Quarantine steamer here last Summer, and is very well adapted for the duties.

THE FILLIBUSTERS.

Unverified Reports of their Return—The Expedition Probably far on its Way.

It was currently reported yesterday that the Cuban fillibusters who left Hoboken and vicinity on tug-boats, on Saturday evening, had been intercepted in the Bay by revenue cutters, and were obliged to return, greatly disappointed that they were not able to reach the steamer Quaker City, which awaited them at the Narrows. Careful inquiries, however, failed to verify the report, and it is now probable that the expeditionary vessel is on her way to Cuba with a daring and hostile regiment of men on board.

General GIGACORIA, who is said to have chief command of the expedition, has been identified with the Cubean movement in this City since its inception; but was more fortunate than the other leaders in eluding the United States authorities. He was selected for his position on account of his thorough acquaintance with the topography of the island, and also because he had a practical and theoretical knowledge of war, having been educated as a soldier and serving in several South American wars. Colonel W. A. C. RYAN, whose redoubtable exploits have been frequently spoken of, ranks nearly equal with General GIGACORIA. He was formerly a Union scout in the Army of the Shenandoah. He is the reputed owner of a large and wealthy village on the line of the Pacific Railroad, and moreover, editor of a newspaper. Colonel CURRIER, also one of the officers of the expedition, was in command of a Massachusetts regiment during the late rebellion.

Reconstruction of the Ministry—Its Present Elements—Increase of Import Duties—Trade and Finance.

Advices from Venezuela are to June 5.

There had been a reconstruction of the Ministry. Owing to the dissatisfaction felt at the policy of President MONAGAS, all the Ministers resigned. MONAGAS accepted the resignation of some, appointing new men in their places, and the rest were prevailed upon to resume office. The new Ministry stands as follows: Interior, Señor AMENGUAL; Finances, Dr. N. PAREJO; War and Marine, General C. SOUBLETTE; Public Credit, Señor N. LINARES; Foreign Relations, Señor ROJAS PAUL; Public Works, F. CONDE.

The first Sunday in August next has been fixed for the election of President for the term commencing Feb. 20, 1870. Some of the revolutionists present PEDRO MANUEL ROJAS, of Barinas, as their candidate; others Ex-President FALCON; others GUZMAN BLANCO; and others MONAGAS, the acting President.

Congress has adjourned without doing anything for the immediate relief of the country. A law had been passed increasing the import duties twenty per cent. for a period of twenty months from the 30th of April last, but on the 31st ult. the National Executive declared wheat flour to be exempt from the additional duty. It had been decreed by that body that from the 11th of May last the navigation of the Orinoco and the Lakes of Valencia and Maracaibo should be thrown open to merchant steam vessels owned by foreigners and sailing under foreign flags. During ten years all machinery, fixtures and necessary combustibles for the said vessels are to be exempt from duty. The dues to be paid to the various States are not to exceed those on Venezuelan vessels, and no questions arising from this decree can be made subjects of international claims.

The Falconists were still conspiring for the restoration of their late chief to power, and everything indicated a fresh rising by them all over the country before long. General PACHANO, one of his adherents, arrived recently from Europe with a large quantity of arms and ammunition, which were to have been landed at Coro, but they were too late, FALCON having already gone into exile at Curacoa. They had consequently been taken to the place, until an opportunity should offer of using them.

Trade was dull everywhere, and there was much misery prevailing among the people in the towns.

Piece of Mexican Pottery Found in Auburn.

From the Auburn Advertiser, June 24.

Mr. SHALES, a laborer at work for General SEGOINE, while excavating yesterday for a cellar-way at the west end of the house the General is building on Easterly-avenue, struck upon a large piece of ancient pottery which rested on a nest of small boulders, and within quite a large deposit of wood coals. It was about three feet below the surface of the ground, which had not been stirred there, except by slight plowing, since the settlement of the country by the whites. It was evident from the shape, thickness and position of the vessel, that it was placed there for cooking purposes in a cavity in the ground dug out for that purpose, and that the deposit of wood coals was made by the burning of wood from time to time under and around it. It has been ascertained, we believe, that the Mexican Indians usually called Allegheny, who used this kind of pottery for cooking purposes, were driven away from Fort Hill by the Iroquois, during the century previous to the discovery of America by COLUMBUS. According to that computation, this piece of pottery must have been placed where it was found at least 400 years ago. As the pottery of the ancient Alleghenies is clearly distinguishable from all others, it being two inches thick and composed very largely of pulverized mica and dust stone, this discovery furnishes another item of evidence that the mound-builders of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys did come up as far as Auburn before they were repulsed.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

From the Missouri to the Pacific Ocean by Rail.

The Plains, the Great American Desert, the Rocky Mountains.

One Hundred Hours from Omaha to San Francisco.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, June 18, 1869.

My trip over the Pacific Railroad, from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, from Omaha to San Francisco, though presenting no very extraordinary experiences, was made under some new conditions of travel; and it was altogether so delightful a trip, and so fruitful in ministrations to the eye and the imagination, that it may be writen out at somewhat greater length than could be wished. Still, as it is manifest that this jaunt is destined, when its varied attractions become known, to be the most popular of all pleasure-rides, I believe it will be worth while setting down the full details of the journey; and, as well to preserve the unity of the subject as to make the letter, if possible, a vade mecum for the tourist, I shall embody the whole story in a single epistle, which will carry the reader from Omaha to San Francisco.

We are at Omaha. By whatever route one comes from the East, one lands there, that being the eastern terminus of the Pacific Railroad. The time-table of the Union Pacific road is so arranged as to make a close connection with the two great lines from the East—the Chicago and Northwest, and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Roads. This time is 4:30 P. M. If you chose, however, you may lie over a day or two at Omaha and spend the time pleasantly and profitably in viewing the town—one of the most remarkable of Western railroad improvisations, and visiting the workshops of the Union Pacific Railroad, which are on a colossal scale. There are several very fair hotels in Omaha, and unless one is excessively finical, he may be quite comfortable in his tarry here.

It had been my intention, on this trip, to go only as far as Ogden, there diverge to Salt Lake, and finish the trans-continental ride after some stay in the City of the Saints. When, however, the Chicago and Northwest train came into Omaha, on Saturday afternoon, I found occasion to alter my resolution. I learnt that the train was to take out two of the Pullman palace cars on their initial trip across the continent, and that Colonel PULLMAN himself was along, and with him some of my old journalistic friends—SIMONTON, of the Associated Press, Governor BROSS, of the Chicago Tribune, and some others; so the invitation to join the party was not to be refused. Accordingly, at 4:30 P. M., Sunday, we rolled out of the station at Omaha and started westward on our long jaunt.

I see I have spoken above of our "party," but in truth this was no prearranged excursion—it merely happened, as I have said, that Colonel PULLMAN was introducing his new cars on the Pacific Road and he invited a few passengers to ride with him. The Pullman "Palace Sleeping Car" has long been known at the West, where, early in the history of railroad travel, the necessity of making very long journeys suggested the desirability of mitigating, by all the appliances of art, the manifold discomforts incident to these extended rides. This desideratum has been admirably realized by the contrivances and adaptations of GEORGE M. PULLMAN, of Chicago, who has done more than all living men to lift railroad travel to the level of a fine art. The drawing-room sleeping car was so perfect a success that the inventor conceived the notion of adding thereto a dining or hotel car; and about a year ago these were put on the Chicago, Alton and St. Louis Road, where they are giving such entire satisfaction that their universal use on all long railroads can hardly be a matter of doubt. Let me now say a word as to these cars on the Pacific Road. The Pullman sleeping car was early introduced on the Union Pacific Railroad, but the dining car has not till now been added; while on the Central Pacific neither the sleeping nor the dining car has yet found a place. It was Mr. PULLMAN's purpose on this excursion to carry both cars clear across the whole stretch of the road, and leave it to the officers and the public to say whether they desired their permanent introduction. There was little chance of hesitation in this matter; and since our arrival here I understand that both styles of the palace car are speedily to be put upon both roads. This is a conclusion on which the traveling public are to be congratulated. In describing, therefore, the absolutely luxurious circumstances under which we made the ride from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean—a ride thus rendered not only tolerable but comfortable, and not only comfortable but a perpetual delight—I am only foreshadowing what all who desire so to do will presently be able to realize in their own experience.

Well, now we are rushing out into the ocean of the Plains, and we have time to take a look about us and see how we are situated. Behind our locomotive are a couple of baggage cars, then three for passengers, lastly the two Pullman cars—the dining and sleeping palaces, the latter in rear. We have 140 passengers on board, all told. We are seated in the sleeping car, which well merits the name of "palace," only that there is no inhabitant of a palace, no Prince, Monarch or Czar on earth who rides so royally or with such pervicos apparatus of comfort, luxury and splendor.

Add to this that we have excellent company with us. There is BROSS, an old-time traveler in the regions of the New West, a victim of the fascinations of the Rocky Mountains, who "Cannot rest from travel, but will drink Life to the lees," full of varied information, and preserving in his ripe age an uncommon boyish freshness of sentiment and joy of nature; there is MCCOOK, the new Governor of Colorado, of which Territory he was a citizen when the war broke out, and who will leave us at Cheyenne, whence he diverges southward to Denver; there is FITCH, of the San Francisco Bulletin, and WAITE of the Brevoort House, New-York, facile princeps of hotel-keepers and rhymsters, who plays the part of "mine host" on this occasion, and Mr. ELLIOTT, who with BEN. HOLLADAY is building a railroad away up into and through Oregon, and entertains us with vivid delineations of the scenic marvels of that wondrous region, and Professor MILLER, of Chicago, an eminent physician of that city; and finally our little society is graced by the presence of Mesdames PULLMAN, SIMONT panions as had been old-time pilgrims on the Plains, recount from personal experience or hearsay. But this is all changed, and now the iron horse bears us swiftly over the substantial viaduct which spans the stream, leaving us in blissful ignorance of the dangers of the passage of the Platte.

For ourselves, we were at this time engaged in the agreeable occupation of breakfasting in our palace dining car, and a charming reunion we had. Having already come 300 miles on the Pacific Road, and dined and slept in the train, we had by this time a tolerably fair notion of what the whole ride was to be. I wish I could describe to you the consciousness of grateful surprise with which we now began to realize that, instead of the experience of the dangers, hardships and discomforts of which we had read as incident to crossing the continent by rail, we were going to have a really charming jaunt. I suppose it will be conceded that, as newspaper men, we started out with an accurate notion as the public generally has as to what we might expect on our trip. Yet I will make a clean breast of it and confess that we had looked forward to the prospect with a good many misgivings and forebodings. We had been informed that the Union Pacific Road was in very bad condition; that we would suffer for eating and sleeping accommodations; that we would incur great delays; that we would run imminent risks of accident and possible danger of the knife of the merciless Sioux or Cheyenne. It is possible that, being old campaigners, we might, so far as ourselves were concerned, have looked forward to the possibility or even the certainty of such experiences without great trepidation; but then several of my companions had their wives, and not only their wives, but families of small children, and though we might "get along," how would it be with those who required so much more delicate surroundings; and, if safe, we had anxiously asked, will they be comfortable?

There was now no room for these questions. They had answered themselves. The stories we had heard were the grossest libels, and, as our friends gathered around the breakfast table, the common remark was, "Well, the Pacific Railroad don't seem to be so much of a failure after all, does it?" In fact the Union Pacific Road, so far as we had come, was not only a good road, but we agreed we had never ridden on a better; while those of our party who had come over the Chicago and Northwestern Road to Omaha asserted that no comparison could be made between the quality of that road and the quality of the Union Pacific. Indeed, when one comes to look into the matter, it is manifest that the Union Pacific could hardly be a poor road, for through a stretch of hundreds and hundreds of miles there is a natural roadbed of indefinite extent, affording facilities for making a track of unsurpassed excellence. Of these facilities the constructors have fully availed themselves, and as the best of iron has been used, and the ends of the rails are all secured by the "fish" joint, the road for a thousand miles is all that could be desired. Then, as to the comfort of this mode of travel, if I have succeeded in conveying to the mind of the reader the faintest impression of our own experience, he will readily perceive that we had nothing to desire, both as to ease and elegance. We had with us a good many Californians who had frequently made the voyage from New-York to San Francisco by steamer, and they never tired contrasting the comfort of our railroad trip with the discomforts of the sea passage, the heat of the isthmus, &c.

So we whirled forward all day Monday over the prairies. It was a divine day;

"Twas one of the charmed days
When the genius of God doth blow,"

And such days are many here. Let us note some of their aspects. And first of all you have overhead a cloudless sky of intense and spiritual azure, that woos the gaze for many a long hour and stirs inexpressible thoughts and yearnings. Around you, stretching on all hands, and sweeping an apparently limitless periphery, is the earth-ocean of the Plains, of the hue of the emerald, save where, far off on the rim of the horizon, it wears the seeming of purple weather; while close on our left as we traveled that day was the South Platte, running like a silver thread through the meadow and dotted with many a green islet. Then, bathing all these in the air of the Plains—that wonderful dry, pure atmosphere, charged with finer essences which have the power to unlock all the avenues of sensibility—to vivify, intoxicate, inspire.

Well, you will have to feed your imagination on these aspects of nature—to absorb and saturate yourself with impressions of unclouded sky and far-reaching vision; for aside from nature there is nothing to be seen. Of life you will behold but little—perhaps a few antelope, which go scampering off to one side of the railroad, wondering what this snorting invasion of their primeval domain may mean; perhaps a plover fluttering its wide wings or a pelican showing its white belly far up against the sky; but of man nothing or next to nothing; though, yes, there is something—there are here and there the bones of oxen recalling the weary journeyings of pilgrims across these Plains in by-gone days, and there is now the railroad on which you are borne, the telegraph line by your side—an enterprise colossal enough to match the feature of the mighty nature which environs you.

Let the reader imagine these scenes and experiences lasting through a stretch of five hundred miles. We make this within twenty four hours from the time of leaving Omaha, so that this brings us up to the afternoon of Monday. We have passed over the first great geographical division of the vast region between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean. This is the region of the Plains, "the grandest of all glacial deposits," according to AGASSIZ. And now a change comes over the scene. It is true, you have been actually rising at the rate of ten feet to the mile for the entire five hundred miles, but without being in the least conscious of ascent; while the wide-stretching prairie has presented no height to break the monotony of vision or rest the peering eye. At length, all at a sudden, there bursts upon your joyous gaze the figure of distant peaks. It is our first view of the Rocky Mountains. It is Long's Peak, full ninety miles off! Presently these heights increase upon us, and rise in front and on either hand—rising in terrace after terrace, till on the topmost crown you descry veils of fleecy splendor which might be taken for clouds, only that they are more intense than the clouds with which they mingle; and you see at length that 'tis the sheen of snows, which, blending with the illuminated glories of the opened heavens, might form the pathway for the white feet of ascending and descending angels.

And to these features, which of course are constant in the landscape, was added an atmospheric spectacle of rare grandeur. For while in our front was this splendor, which I have faintly limned, we saw on turning round, in our rear and filling the whole eastern rim of the horizon, a stupendous black cloud, which proved to be big with one of the terrible storms of the Plains. We had passed swiftly through it, however, had run the gauntlet and left it to wreak its vengeance behind us and form a pillar of cloud that glowered in direful contrast with the revelations of glory and the pillar of fire ahead.

It was amid such scenes that our train came to a halt at Cheyenne at 5 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday. This is the diverging point for Denver, 110 miles south by stage. By stage, as yet, though we saw the railroad track, all of which is completed and bridged, and it will probably be ironed this year. I suppose Cheyenne is not what it was a year or two ago, before the railroad passed far beyond it. It is certainly not the kind of place described by the letter-writers—the pandemonium where lawless human nature displayed its wildest excesses. It is yet rough enough, to be sure, but is no longer the scene of the old-time carnivals of crime. Its attention as the terminus of the Colorado Railroad and capital of the new Territory of Wyoming ought to make it a place of considerable importance, and it has a look of hustle and business, as though it felt the stirrings of the future. I imagined of these distinct individuals the population, and got from each the same figure—1,500; so I presume we may consider that the actual tally—or, at least, as the number which all Cheyenne has agreed upon.

Cheyenne is situated at the foot of the Black Hills, the most easterly spur of the great Rocky Mountain system. It lies itself 6,000 feet above the sea level. Here, therefore, begins the second grand geographical division of the trans-Mississippi country—the Mountain Plateau region.

The character of this country—the marked transition from the Plains—does not fail to declare itself to the observer. Yet the reader will misapprehend the aspect of what he is to find, if he fancies that one sees here imposing mountain scenery; that he will find in abundance bold, but not bare, but, though the massive forms of these mountains, which constitute the Rocky Mountain system, are in sight, off in the distance, yet one seems to be moving all the time only on an elevated broken plateau. Your altitude addresses itself rather to the sensibility than to the sight. You have the sense of being up, up, at a great height. And so you are, indeed, for when we had gone a couple of hours beyond Cheyenne, to Sherman, we were on the highest summit of the entire railroad line—eight thousand two hundred feet. The air here became thin and wintry, and is so even under a July sun; so after an hour or two spent in watching the variegated forms of broken rock and huge chasms over which we passed, and the snow-caps darkening in the mirk, we very glad to turn in early.

When we arose Tuesday morning, we were just crossing a fork of the North Platte a few miles East of Rawlins, which is seven hundred and ten miles West of Omaha, and which we reached by six in the morning. I may note, as one of the evidences of the varied improvements which the Union Pacific is making in its road, that the temporary wooden bridge over this fork of the Platte (whose banks form a deep chasm) has just been replaced by a substantial stone structure; and perhaps such proofs that the Company is doing its duty are as deserving of mention as are the flaws that a hypercritical eye may discover here and there. At Rawlins the railroad has a collection of large and finely-built workshops. Besides these, Rawlins has perhaps a hundred buildings—if houses that are more canvas than anything else can be called buildings. Nevertheless, I think very likely Rawlins is "standing" for quite a future of its own.

But what a scene of desolation met our view and surrounded us, that whole day's journey! Here is, indeed, the Great American Desert—a vast barren basin, utterly destitute of life, devoid of living streams, a Sahara without a single relieving oasis, truly, the Valley of the Shadow of Death! I had been anxious to see sage brush, of which I had read so much; well, here it was in hideous profusion, a sort of devil's herbage whereof no living creature may eat. I had also wanted to visit the Alkali Plains—and here they were, stretching out in their white barrenness, altogether unlovely to the human vision! Anon the scene takes on new aspects of sterne and melancholic grandeur. Great bare and mottled rocks rise up on every side to close in the landscape, which every now and then opens into new vistas of picturesque desolation, where succeed each other blasted heaths, beetling crags, which wind and flood and lightning have worn and scorched, and exceeding high mountains, such as that to which the Fiend took up the Son of Man in the Temptation.

Is it fancy, or is there really something in the very geographical nomenclature of the region which corresponds with its desolation? There is "Red Desert," for instance, and "Black Buttes," and "Separation," and "Bitter Creek." At the latter place is a station, and around are encamped, in tabernacles of canvas or mud, some seventy of the railroad employes. There is no drinkable water in the region, and all that is used has to be brought from a distance of sixty miles. The Company sank deep wells here, but all the water was salty and brackish and unusable. A few weeks ago they had a rain here—the first in ten months! Nor does humanity here seem to be less vile than nature; for you can see, if you jump off the train for a few minutes, the fruits of practical miscegenation in the beastings of white men and squaws, and if you do not see you will easily learn of something worse than that—of murders and outrages committed here by cut-throat outlaws. But these things are probably over with now, for the swift justice that has been meted out to such desperadoes by the Company's officers is likely to give them effectual quietus. As an illustration of this I may mention an incident related to me by one of the Division Superintendents who came aboard our train. It appears that a gang of these ruffians, ten days ago, attempted to stop the running of the road, by coercing the hands to knock off work. Hearing of this, the Superintendent ran down his train from an upper station with a lot of picked men on board, seized the gang, chose out two of the ringleaders, gave them swift trial and then—swung them off with a short shrift, to the gratification of gods and men.

Amid all this death of nature we occasionally greeted the sight of humanity—not indeed of human habitations (save that of the railroad hands,) but of human travel. We saw from time to time parties of emigrants or pilgrims (Mormons, most likely) with their long caravans of white canvas-covered wagons, going lumbering through the wilderness. This spectacle served to recall to the minds of our elder traveling companions many a reminiscence of "crossing the Plains." What a contrast between then and now! The slow, toilsome, tedious jogging of the mule-drawn trains over the vast, dreary waste—a dozen or fifteen miles made at the end of the day—then the night bivouac, with defensive preparations against the Indians; now, whirling along at the rate of thirty miles an hour, with sumptuous repasts during the day and luxurious couches during the night! What a contrast even with the comparative rapidity of the overland mail coaches, for Governor Bross informs me that three years ago he was ten days and nights in making this distance, which we have just traversed in two!

There is another subject to engage the attention and break the monotony of this desolate scene; and that is that precisely in this region are rich and inexhaustible deposits of coal—a fact of immense significance in the future of the railroad and the country. We struck the coal region very early in the morning, at Carbon, and during the whole day we have seen prolific indications of it along our entire route. During the day we passed several pits where the Company is working it; it crops out from all the hillsides, and, indeed, in many places it can be dumped right from the mouth of the pit into the cars. I have already, in a previous letter, indicated some of the important bearings which this discovery must have upon the development of that region; but there is another that may be touched upon, and that is the influence which the abundance of coal along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad is likely to have in drawing closer the interpunction between it and the Central Pacific. The latter must needs come to the former for its fuel. At the same time, the Central Pacific may send the Union Pacific cheap labor, by giving it all the Chinese hands it may need. (I learn that the Union Pacific is contemplating the trying this experiment.) So you see by exchanging coolies for coal, the mutual dependence and support of the two roads will be very well exemplified.

We reached Green River (848 miles west of Omaha) at noon of Tuesday, and from this point on, the country begins to be a little less absolutely abandoned to the Fiend. We are now past the rocky ridge, which forms the divide of the continent, and henceforth all the running waters go to seek the Pacific Ocean. Green River is itself grateful to the eye, and has here and there picturesque banks and touches of verdure that seem of ravishing beauty as contrasted with the "desarts vast and unloos dire" through which we were passing in the forenoon. Later in the afternoon you pass a wonderfully striking and picturesque succession of architectural hills or buttes, where nature seems to have sought to exhaust herself in all manner of fantastic forms of castles, cathedrals and pyramids, crumbling and majestic; backgrounded, perhaps, by the Titans in some spectral mood. From this on the mountains grow bolder and more picturesque, and fold in closer and closer around you, till finally they break into wondrous canyons, narrow and ragged. The first of these is Echo Canyon, (925 miles from Omaha,) and, further on, Weber Canyon (1,036 miles from Omaha.) It was 10 o'clock Tuesday night before we reached Echo, so we had little opportunity to see these striking objects. Yet if the vision was shorned, the fancies served to intensify their grand and wild grandeur. It is in some fit for the pencil of GUSTAVE DORE, those beetling walls of rock, where far up you see only a little rift of lurid sky, while below are bottomless pits and the sound of rushing waters. That night we went to bed with Dantesque dreams of a new Inferno; but we awoke early Wednesday morning to find ourselves at Promontory, the western terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad, the eastern commencement of the Central Pacific. We had made the long stretch of 1,084 miles in a little over sixty hours.

As we have passed over the whole of the Union Pacific Railroad, this might be the proper place to enter into some reflections on the character of the road, as a road. But I have really little to say that has not already appeared in the course of this letter. And this may be added. For near a thousand miles it is as good as could possibly be desired. The last hundred or hundred and fifty miles we passed over when we were asleep; but when we compared notes in the morning, we could not discover that this part of the track had been rough enough to disturb in the least our slumbers. I suppose, however, I have from the officers of the road a pretty accurate conception of the character of this part of the Union Pacific. The track was laid before the frost was out of the ground, and when the thaw came it was left in a bad condition of ballast. This drawback alone might by this time have been overcome; but the past Spring proved to be one of unprecedented wetness for this region, and this greatly retarded the work of "surfacing up." Then, again, after the labor of construction was over, there was a kind of stampede among the workmen, and this made new delay. All these difficulties, however, have now disappeared. The finishing touches are being given to the imperfect parts; and it is probable that by the time you publish this letter, the track will have been made of uniform excellence. I should not insist thus emphatically on this matter, were it not for the fact that it is possible the public may still cherish the same false impressions as to the condition of the road which we had previously to coming over it. Let me, then, so far as it is in my power, close this controversy by saying that there is not a person in our party who would not willingly make affidavit that, as a whole, the Union Pacific Railroad is in as good condition as any road in the United States.

Promontory might be called Promontory, or the symptom of a town, for that is all it is. But probably even the symptom will come to naught; for as the point of junction of the road is not to be here, but at or near Ogden, the temporary eruption of life and business will likely soon disappear from here. It is not a fit point for the terminus of either road.

The Central Pacific Road does not make close connection with the Union Pacific, and I believe the usual experience is that passengers arriving by the former at Promontory have to wait over till afternoon for the Central Pacific westward-bound train. Our own experience was more fortunate, as we got off, by special arrangement, at about 11 A. M. As, however, we had, even by this arrangement, several hours to stay at Promontory, I proposed to one of my traveling companions, Dr. MILLER, that we should make the ascent of one of the lofty hills that environ the basin in which the station of Promontory lies. We chose the height directly south, as we inferred that we might thence get a good view of Great Salt Lake. The distance to the mountain seemed to be under a mile, but in reality it proved to be over four. However, as we had started out amid the chaffing of our friends, we persevered in our determination. The ascent was toilsome, and the rarified air of the peak (some 6,000 feet high) made us pant a little; but we were well repaid when we reached the summit, for, thence looking southward, sure enough Salt Lake stretched far beneath our feet! It was a picture long to be remembered. There was the lake itself, its bright green looking like a great emerald; around its margin was a white deposit of alkali, which, transformed by the alchemist sun, wore the semblance of a silver rim about the jewel, while surrounding both was the frame of stupendous mountains, dark at their base, and ending in flashing summits of snow. Amid the rocks on the topmost peak we plucked some mountain daisies—talked a while with a couple of Saints who were up there hunting a bear which had been seen prowling about, and then had to make our way quickly down and back, as the engine was screeching the ruppel.

"Wee, modest, crimson-tipped flower;"

From Promontory westward there is a long stretch of several hundred miles which is one dreary monotone of sage-brush and desolation. Ordinarily, the trains go through this country at night; but our earlier start rendered us less fortunate. The railroad follows the Humboldt Valley for 250 miles—a valley walled in to the north by high volcanic table-lands, and presenting but little to interest in all its wide stretch. For a while the encampments of the Chinese hands on the Central Pacific attract by their novelty, and it may amuse you, while the train stops a few minutes, to chat with the grinning, good-natured Celestials. (I learned from one of them that they get $30 per month in gold and "find" themselves.) But the scene is tedious in the last degree, and you will be glad to turn in early, as we did Wednesday evening.

"Elko," a station 222 miles west of Promontory, is the point of divergence for the White Pine country—a rough stage ride of 120 miles south; but this we passed during the night, and when we were called to breakfast early Thursday morning, we found ourselves at Humboldt, 498 miles west of Promontory and 1,480 miles west of Omaha. Humboldt used to be a mining place of some note; but the mines are now abandoned and the town deserted. A few miles beyond this, we came to the "sink of the Humboldt," a considerable sheet of water, looking like a lake; in this the Humboldt River loses itself and disappears under ground. The country still cheats our hope and, for still another hundred miles beyond Humboldt, has the character of a Siberia or Tartar Steppe—fit only for a penal settlement, into which the Government might advantageously make a general jail-delivery of all the criminals of the country.

And then comes a change grateful to our souls as that which greets the traveler who, after passing the Desert of Lahore, sees suddenly the Vale of Cashmere smiling at his feet. The transition is made by gentle gildings that steal upon the senses like soft interludes of music. You emerge, first of all, into the valley of the Truckee, a clear-flowing stream that goes babbling and fretting over its rocky bed, and slopes up in wood-clad brazes, which are infinitely pleasing to the eye after the dull infinity of sage-brush plains; then loom up before you vista after vista of distant hills, dressed in splendid pines; a little while, and you lose the vision of beauty, and again a little while it reappears with heightened enchantment, till at length you reach Truckee, and there you meet, in personal presence, the majestic forms and towering crests of the Sierra Nevada.

Here are the [illegible]! This is mountain scenery!

We got to Truckee at noon of Thursday. This is the centre of a very extensive lumber trade, and must grow to be a place of some importance. All around for hundreds of miles—and, indeed, extending clear up into Oregon—is an immense area of splendid pine forests. From here came all the ties used on the Central Pacific Railroad, and during the past year or two all the lumber forwarded from Truckee has been for the use of the railroad; but now that it is finished, the people are shipping large quantities of timber to Sacramento, and are making a thriving and lucrative business out of it. Truckee was almost entirely destroyed by fire last August, but is now rebuilt in clean, fresh pine. It boasts a newspaper and a theatre, and claims 3,000 inhabitants.

From Truckee the road carries you up a succession of steep grades that will give you ample opportunity to study the triumphs of railroad engineering, and through great tunnels that rival the labor of the Simplon. The distance from Truckee to the Summit is 14 miles, and in this distance the ascent is 1,176 feet. You rise up and up, over Alp on Alp, till the eternal snows stretch all around you; then through another tunnel, emerging from which you find yourself in the Summit Valley. In this manner you have to be on the lookout for your ride; whole mountains overhang you in the wild, opening in vast crevices beneath your feet. Here, and for several miles through the Sierra Nevada, there is a royal feast of the things for the imagination. It would be impossible to conceive of mountain scenery of more varied sublimity than upon the vision during this ride; which majestic form, in majestic or terrific form, and bottomless abysses lie below, and where the splendor of snow and the music of soughing pines invite to

"Summer night in the stately halls of God."

We passed through all this in the early afternoon of Thursday, while the whole vast landscape was bathed in the glory of sunshine. It richly repaid us for many an hour of dreary desert travel, and I should be glad to attempt to picture it in detail, (as I shall in a future communication,) but this letter is already too long, and general epithets would be wholly inadequate to convey any conception of its wondrous grandeur. And so we traversed the mountains and swept down the foot-hills, and lo! we were in the rich valley of the Sacramento—in ruinal California, in El Dorado!

It was sunset of Thursday when we reached the City of Sacramento, and here we remained over night. At 6 o'clock Friday morning we took the railroad to Vallejo, and thence by steamer twenty miles to San Francisco, where we arrived at 11 A. M.—one hundred hours from Omaha. Some of us had not been very well on starting; the ladies, indeed, were all feeling poorly. They and all of us at the end of our journey found ourselves not only wholly free from fatigue, but completely rehabilitated in body and spirits. Were we very far from wrong if we voted the Pacific Railroad a success? W. S.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

—T. A. Trollope's Novels. (Philadelphia: T. B. PETERSON & Co.) There is one class of popular fictions which has a special claim on readers of discrimination; we allude to the novels of local life—those which faithfully delineate the natural aspects, peculiar customs and special phases of character which distinguish a country or a district. Besides the entertainment thus provided, actual and often valuable, or at least interesting information is afforded in an attractive way. To many Europeans COOPER first revealed the scenery and colonial life of America; whoever would analyze Paris life should read BALZAC; low London life has been photographed by DICKENS; and we know Sweden through Miss BREMER and HANS ANDERSEN. ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE has made Italian life his study for many years, and has written a series of novels to describe and illustrate it—not in its phase of high and historic sentiment like Mme. DE STAEL, nor under the guise of fashionable sheoneteism, after the manner of LEVER—but in its simplicity and truth. The local peasantry, the city artisan, the poor and proud nobility, the factor, mechanic, advocate, rustic beauty, country gentleman, young patriot, convent pupil—each and all the varieties of Italian life and character, he has portrayed with conscientious skill. To thoroughly appreciate the truthfulness of these pictures one must have lived in Italy; but even those who have only passed through or sojourned a very short time in that country will recognize many of the facts and features of these novels with sympathy and satisfaction. They are unexaggerated, thoughtful, authentic and naive. T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS have just republished the last of the series, which has appeared in England—Leonora Casaloni, or the Marriage Secret. In this story we have a vivid and true picture of the Basilican of St. John Lateran at Rome, and of the coast where the heroine resides; the wildest scenery of the Apennines is admirably delineated. An old Roman family is drawn to the life, and some of the characters are as original as they are individual and interesting. The same house has also issued a uniform edition of ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE's Italian novels, which as a series, form as complete, graphic and suggestive a revelation of the normal traits and special tendencies of modern Italian life as can be imagined, with the most charming pictures of country and city—all written in a spirit of narrative fidelity and of philosophic insight, and each illustrating a particular class of people, form of character, or of local existence. We know of no fictions of recent date more pleasing and instructive, or which appeal so directly to the most memorable associations of foreign travel. These books are printed and bound in a very neat and tasteful style.

—Rural Poems. By WILLIAM BARNES. Handy-volume series. (Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS.) We have frequently mentioned, in terms of deserved commendation, the "Handy-volume" series of works in process of publication by the house of ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston. The size is convenient for holding—it would have been a favorite with Dr. JOHNSON, who liked a book that he could catch up and read standing before the fireplace—the typography clear and handsome, and the price moderate. Messrs. ROBERTS BROTHERS have already issued in this form the following works: Happy Thoughts, by F. C. DURAND; Doctor Jacob, a novel, by Miss M. BEETHAM EDWARDS; Pianchette, or the Science of Despair; Edelweiss, by BERTHOLD AUERBACH; Realities of Irish Life, by W. STEWART TRENCH; and the volume of beautiful poems whose title stands at the head of this volume. We noticed these poems at the time of their publication in another form, and will only add that their present dress is in every way worthy of them. They have met with a very warm reception in this country, and fully deserve their popularity.

—Speeches on the Legislative Independence of Ireland. By THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER. With Introductory Notes, and the Memorial Oration by RICHARD O'GORMAN, Esq. (New-York: P. M. HAVERTY.) Aside from their own eloquence, and the circumstances under which they were delivered, these speeches have a special interest for the Irish-American public, to whom they are now offered in this form. MEAGHER was not only a genuine orator, but a true patriot and lover of human liberty. In his own land he battled bravely against oppression, and in his adopted country took up arms in defence of freedom and Union. His life was no less eloquent than his words.

—The Yosemite Guide-Book.—(New-York: B. WESTERMANN & Co.) This finely-illustrated volume forms a part of the geological survey of California. It contains a description of the famous Yosemite Valley, the adjacent region of the Sierra Nevada and of the "big trees" of California. The descriptive matter is illustrated with numerous finely-executed wood engravings, that give a vivid impression of the mingled beauty and grandeur of the physical scenery of that wonderful region. Well-engraved maps add greatly to the practical value of the work.

—Foreign Missions. By RUFUS ANDERSON, D. D., LL. D. (New-York: CHAS. SCRIBNER & Co.) The object of this work is to set forth the claims of foreign missions upon the sympathy and support of Christian denominations in this country. The author, who, till recently filled the position of Foreign Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, is, of course, their enthusiastic advocate; and though the subject affords room for radical differences of opinion, it will not be denied that he presents his side of the question with force and candor.

—Two Years Before the Mast. By RICHARD H. DANA, Jr. (Boston: FIELDS, OSGOOD & Co.) We are glad to welcome this old acquaintance in its new dress. Twenty years ago it was a great favorite with the reading public, especially with the younger members, and we have no doubt this revised and enlarged edition will command the extensive circulation it so well deserves. Besides the original matter, the book contains an account of a second visit by Mr. DANA to the scenes of the narrative, twenty-five years after his early voyage.

—Eight Years' Wanderings in Ceylon. By Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER. With illustrations. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) BAKER is a mighty hunter, as well as an energetic explorer, and this book contains a well-written narrative of his exploits and adventures in the wilds of Ceylon. The fault of the book, as it is that of most books of hunting, is monotony. One elephant hunt is like another, and the reader experience of the monotonous story of slaughter.

—Poetical Thoughts. By SAMUEL H. LLOYD. (New-York: W. F. WHARTON.) This is a little volume of eighty-three pages, containing short reflections on various subjects of interest, principally religious and moral. While there is nothing very original in what the author has to say, his thoughts are generally very just, and are expressed in good English.

—Three Thousand Miles through the Rocky Mountains. By A. K. MCCLURE. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) This work, brought out in LIPPINCOTT's excellent style, is composed of letters published in the New-York Tribune and the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin and Press, and not intended to be issued in book form. But the interest felt in the growing West has induced the author to collect them; and they well deserve the honors of reprint for the great variety of interesting information contained in them on the subject of that region. The traveler proceeds from Omaha, that regular midland starting-point in such an excursion, to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and thence to Denver and Idaho in Colorado; thence to Green River, and so to Salt Lake City, the science and quality of which Mr. McCLURE gives very earnestly. We should be disposed to quote several of these, if we had the space to spare. We are then carried to Snake River, in Idaho Territory, and to Virginia City and Union City in Montana, the scenery, hot springs and other features of which are described in a very graphic manner, that leaves a good many impressions on the memory. One of these we may note in passing as something very creditable to that rough-and-ready Oberland. Colonel MCCLURE says that "in all the frontiers of Western life he never saw a man interrupted at a ball or other social meeting" in Montana. Those wishing to post themselves on the subject of that magnificent and extraordinary Rocky Mountain domain, should read the Colonel's book, as well as those of LORING BRACE and SAMUEL BOWLES, lately noticed in these columns.

—Hours at Home presents, as usual, a good variety of topics, treated for the most part in a very readable manner. The number opens with "Syrian Rambles," No. 5, by the American Consul-General of Syria, who describes "A Day on the Other Side of Jordan." Professor CURTIS writes on the influence of the Arthurian Romances on English literature. Mr. C. LEMYRENE contributes a very interesting article entitled "Reminiscences of English Lawyers." FROUDE's masterly discourse on "University Education" is concluded; and these, with other articles and the literary notices, make up a very excellent number.

—Beatrice. By Hon. RODEN NOEL. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) This is a narrative poem in very smooth blank verse, interspersed with lyrics. The story is a touching one, and is gracefully told; but we cannot say much more in its favor as a poem. It is rather measured prose than poetry.

—Handbook of Chemistry and Handbook of Natural Philosophy. (New-York: A. S. BARNES & Co.) These volumes are elementary and practical in character, and are intended to be introductory to the more advanced works, on the same subjects, belonging to the "Cambridge Course of Physics."

—Gun, Rod and Saddle. Personal Experiences. By Ubique. (New-York: W. A. TOWNSEND & ADAMS.) This book contains the personal experiences of a British sportsman in America, and will undoubtedly prove of interest to people of the craft.

—The Villa on the Rhine. LEYPOLDT & HOLT have now issued this charming German novel in two editions,—one in two volumes and the other in one. The size of the page and the type are the same in both.

LAW REPORTS.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

OPENING JUDGMENT—COLLECTOR'S SUITS.

Septimus Crook vs. Hugh Maxwell.—This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to set aside a judgment which was rendered in his favor on Sept. 20, 1865, for $4,929 08, the amount of which was paid to him on Oct. 21, 1868, and the judgment satisfied. The motion was founded on this state of facts. In July, 1860, the plaintiff commenced this suit to recover back certain sums alleged to have been illegally exacted by the defendant, as Collector of New-York, on shipments of rum imported by the plaintiff. On April 22, 1867, a general verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, and the case was referred to the Collector to calculate and adjust the amount due. On Sept. 22, 1868, he made a report to the effect that there was due, on the amount of the verdict was $4,924 12, and for that sum, with costs, the judgment was entered, and, as above stated, it was paid and satisfied of record. Neither the plaintiff nor his attorney was consulted or advised with, as to the adjustment of the amount of the verdict, and they had no idea that the adjustment would be entered until January, 1869. When the plaintiff's attorney discovered that some items of the plaintiff's claim had been omitted, the extent of which was not discovered till April, 1869. In that month the plaintiff commenced another suit against the defendant, to recover the amount of the items omitted from the adjustment by the defendant. The defendant set up, as a bar to that suit, that it had not been brought within the time allowed and limited by the statute of limitations. This case was brought to a hearing in February, 1869, upon the amendment of the facts. Judge Smalley, before whom it was heard, held that the Statute of Limitations applied, and that the plaintiff could not recover in that action; and thereupon the suit was dismissed by the motion upon the judgment in this suit was made. The motion was also heard before Judge Smalley, who has given a decision, in which he discusses the following facts, he says: "The power of the Court to open a judgment for the correction of errors in the assessment of damages, such as are claimed to have been made in this case, is well established, if it was not too well settled, both in the State and the Federal Courts, to require authorities to sustain it. It is not pleaded that the plaintiff has been guilty of laches in presenting his application to this Court, and is therefore without redress, although the Government, through its officers of the Customs, has in violation of law and against the decisions of the Courts, exacted from him quite a large sum of money which it is heretofore refused to refund. It should be borne in mind that all the invoices, entries and other evidence to prove these claims were in the Custom-house subject to the exclusive control of the defendant, under the control of its officers, and only accessible to the plaintiff by special favor; that the plaintiff had no reason to distrust the correctness of the Customs officers in the month of Sept. 1868, and that even, although he had no knowledge when it was made. In looking into the matter in January, 1869, he discovered some errors and was then induced to make a further examination, in which he discovered many more, and in April, 1869, he commenced a second suit, when he should have moved to open judgment in the first one. Immediately upon the discovery of the error he filed the present motion. By the bill of particulars, filed in the second suit on May 12, 1869, the defendant is apprised of the full nature and character of the plaintiff's claim, and that there was no intervening lapse of time between that and the filing of the Custom-house affidavit in December, 1868. Certainly the plaintiff's delay under the circumstances cought not to be laches to prevent his having redress against the money wrongfully withheld from him. I regret that the United States Government should resort to such a defense, and do not believe upon mature consideration, that it will persist in it. If it is a question of dollars only, a defendant would hardly tarnish his reputation by insisting upon it, and few lawyers would be willing to stand up in Court and defend his cause. It is ordered that the judgment rendered on the 20th of September, 1868, for the amount reported by the Custom House officers, be vacated and the rule of reference then made be revoked, and that it be referred to a Commissioner to make the assessment, and that on such determination the defendant be allowed the amount paid October 21, 1868.

For plaintiff, A. W. Griswold.

PROVOKED BY JEALOUSY.

ALEXANDER Purcell was charged with assaulting James H. Sullivan, a boarder at the St. Charles Hotel, with a club, while standing at the corner of Houston-street and Broadway on Saturday evening, inflicting painful and serious wounds. The assault was caused by jealousy. The prisoner was committed.

ATTEMPT TO KILL.

Thomas Hanson, a laborer, at the Brooklyn Navy-yard was committed for having attempted to shoot John O'Brien, of 170, in Cherry-street, with a revolver. It appears that O'Brien had been his friend, but had turned against the defendant, and that he had acted in self-defense.

Essex Market—Shandley, Justice.

CAPTURE OF BURGLARS.

Late on Saturday evening, George Frank and Robert Candle were detected in the Saw-mill shop of Gerard Mehlstedt, corner of Pike and South streets, by Officers Haggerty, of the Seventeenth Precinct. They effected an entrance through a skylight. They were held for examination.

ATTEMPTED STREET ROBBERY.

Thomas Morton was accosted by Charles Larabee with demanding him in the street on Saturday evening, and upon his refusing to comply with the request, however, contained nothing worth taking. The occurrence was witnessed by Officer Carson, of the Seventeenth Precinct, and a night watchman, and they arrested and arraigned Morton. He was committed.

THE FOURTH-AVENUE BURGLARY.

Charles Hart has been arrested by Officer Little, of the Seventeenth Precinct, for being concerned in the robbery of George H. Rawlins' establishment, on Fourth-avenue, last week. He was remanded until to-day for examination.

Tombs Police Court—Dodge, Justice.

J. H. Bentinger was charged by Francis Kingsley, of the Hoffman House, with obtaining $103 worth of dresses from Mrs. Kinsley's dressmaking establishment, which he did not pay for. He was released on parole, as he said that he was willing to settle for the goods.

Messrs. M. K. Jesup & Co., No. 19 Pine-street, advertise to pay the July Interest for the Joliet and Chicago, Dubuque and Sioux City, Detroit and Milwaukee, Detroit and Pontiac, and Macon and Augusta Roads.

It will be seen from the following correspondence that Mr. Hamilton Bldermanburg, who took charge, as President, of the Nassau Bank, in August, 1867, on the eve of the great troubles of that year, has resigned his trust to the Board of Directors. In accepting his resignation, the Board, we feel quite sure, do no more than justice in their resolutions to the fidelity and successful administration of this gentleman:

The Nassau Bank,
New-York, June 15, 1869.

To the Board of Directors:

Gentlemen: In consummation of a purpose formerly made known, to be tested at your last annual election, I now respectfully tender my resignation as President of this bank, to take effect on the 1st of August next.

In thus severing a connection that has existed through years of intimate and friendly relationship with the members of this Board, I may interesting myself on an occasion like this, upon my official labors at a time of great pecuniary embarrassment, and marked by previous experience. I am conscious of having often imperfectly discharged the duties devolving upon me, but could only bring to their performance an honest desire and determination to meet the requirements of the situation to the best of my ability, to endeavor to uphold the credit of the institution, at all hazards, and to make its every resources available to that end. The strain was severe, and I doubt not you share with me the pleasing recollection that Barnard felt the difficulties of the crisis, and the success which has attended the bank never faltered from moments of the greatest pressure of every obligation, either at the counter or the Clearing-house, without hesitation or embarrassment. I may add that we were enabled to enter with an unimpaired record upon its subsequent career.

I avail myself of this occasion to express my grateful acknowledgments for the generous confidence and kindness, the cordiality and support, which I have so long received at your hands. The uniform harmony of sentiment and action that has ever marked our official relations, and the many agreeable associations connected with our social intercourse, can never be forgotten; they will be treasured in my memory while life shall last.

With my earnest hopes for the continued and increasing prosperity of the institution, and my sincere wishes for the happiness and welfare of each and all of you, I am, most truly, yours,

H. BLYDENBURGH.

The Nassau Bank,
New-York, June 28, 1869.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held this day, the Committee to whom was referred the communication of the President, submitted the following resolutions and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

HAMILTON BLYDENBURGH, Esq., having tendered to this Board his resignation as President, an office which he has filled for twelve years with honor to himself and with credit to the institution, during a period of political excitement, war and financial embarrassment, with regular dividends paid to the stockholders, the creation of the surplus fund, with a respectable surplus, notwithstanding a loss to the bank arising from the defalcation of an employe during the time amounting to nearly $100,000.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Board are due and are hereby tendered to HAMILTON BLYDENBURGH, Esq., for his sagacity, perseverance and untiring industry in the discharge of his duties as President, and in accepting his resignation we yield to his wish to be relieved from the labors and responsibilities of a position which he has so long and faithfully discharged, and that the Secretary be instructed to inform him the best wishes of the members of this Board for his future happiness and prosperity.

Resolved, That it is with great pleasure that this Board can still retain in the connection of the bank Mr. HLYDENBURGH as one of its members, except as he may be temporarily absent in carrying out his plans to detach the republic from active labors by travel and recreation which he had in contemplation in offering his resignation.

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed by this Board to present a proper testimonial to be presented to Mr. BLYDENBURGH as a mark of their esteem for the members of the Board to their President, and as a memorial of their appreciation of his unbending integrity in his dealings with the Bank and the public.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

A curious case of personal pique has been exhibited in the French Corps Legislatif, resulting in the resignation of M. SCHNEIDER, the presiding officer of that body. It appears that M. DAVID, one of the Vice-Presidents, was decorated by the Emperor, which M. SCHNEIDER interpreted as a slight put upon himself, and consequently tendered his resignation, which, however, he subsequently withdrew.

The most recent telegrams from the French port of Brest indicate that the Great Eastern is getting on well with her task of laying the new cable. A few slight faults were detected, but these have been overcome without difficulty.

The Queen of Great Britain appears to have entered more conspicuously into public life since the arrival of the Viceroy of Egypt. Her Majesty reviewed the Guards at Windsor on Saturday, His Highness being the honored guest of the occasion. Vast crowds were present, and the enthusiasm was complete.

The unrelenting and vigorous policy of the Spanish Government, foreshadowed by PRIM in his recent speech, is now being actually exhibited toward the Republicans, all of whose demonstrations are being repressed with the strong hand. SAGASTA, in the midst of an exciting debate in the Cortes on Saturday, observed that the Government was fully determined to punish all unconstitutional movements.

The recent Mazzinian movement appears to have failed completely, since the Government announces that "the attitude of the population" has contributed, with the vigilance of the authorities, in preventing disturbances. The Government forbids the collection of subscriptions in behalf of those who suffered, by their own fault, in the demonstrations. The Swiss authorities have refused any longer to shelter MAZZINI, and he was compelled in consequence to take his departure on Saturday for London.

The Emperor NAPOLEON, in a letter to the President of the Corps Legislatif, presents his views in regard to elections generally. He says elections will now as before continue to perform the task of reconciling power with "sincerely liberal institutions."

General DULCE, ex-Captain-General of Cuba, arrived in Madrid yesterday.

GENERAL.

Presentation Week at Yale begins to-day. This afternoon the speaking for the Deforrest Gold Medal takes place, and in the evening the Juniors have their promenade concert, at which THEO. THOMAS' band will perform. To-morrow night all College goes, with its friends, to "Wooden Spoon." On Wednesday, the Senior Class is presented in the chapel, the class ivy is planted, and the class tear is shed. As usual New-Haven will overflow with fair strangers—mothers, sisters and cousins of the students.

The mixing mill of the American Powder Works, at South Acton, Mass., exploded on Saturday night, when JOHN GRAY, one of the employes, was terribly burned.

Harvard and Williams College played a game of base ball together on Saturday, at Springfield, Mass.; the latter were defeated by a score of 45 to 8.

The Red Stockings, of Cincinnati, are pursuing their victorious career. They played a game of base ball with the Olympics, of Washington, on Saturday, and at the end of the fourth inning the score stood 4 to 0 in their favor. At this point a violent rain storm put an end to the further progress of the game.

The Ashton "coarse" salt mill and three "fine" salt blocks, at Geddes, N. Y., were destroyed by fire on Saturday night; loss $60,000, without insurance.

At Detroit, Mich., the foundry and machine shops of the Fulton Iron Works were destroyed by fire, Saturday morning. Loss $20,000; insured for $10,000. Two persons connected with the Detroit Fire Department were much injured by portions of the falling building.

The western regions of Kansas have been suffering much from storms and consequent floods. Dispatches from the locality on Saturday report that fears were entertained that the Pacific Railway Bridge over the Republican River would be destroyed. In other portions of the State, however, the prospects in regard to the crops are excellent.

An interesting discourse was preached yesterday morning at the Twenty-third-street Presbyterian Church by Rev. Dr. H. D. NORTHROP, the pastor. Allusion was made to the recent death of Hon. HENRY J. RAYMOND, and the character and deeds of the deceased were ably touched upon.

The Narragansett Park races closed on Saturday. The most important race was for a purse of $2,000, won by American Girl, in three straight heats, beating Lady Thorn, second, and Goldsmith Maid, third.

GOVERNOR BULLOCK, of Georgia, it is stated, will shortly convene a special session of the State Legislature, with a view to ascertain the purposes of that body in regard to the eligibility of negroes to office, now that the Supreme Court of the State has decided upon the question. He evidently wishes both Houses to recall and recount the negro members who were expelled last year. These best informed upon the subject, however, hardly think that the General Assembly will be prepared to take this course, which would certainly necessitate a new election of State Senators. The Legislature will probably acknowledge the Supreme Court decision as binding in the future only.

The United States steamer Narragansett arrived at Key West yesterday with yellow fever on board. Six of the officers and three of the crew were suffering from the disease, but their cases did not appear to be of the worst type.

The Vice-President and Mrs. COLFAX have gone to Newport, R. I., where they are the guests of Mr. COGGESHALL, an old friend of Mr. COLFAX. On Saturday the Vice-President and party explored the beautiful environs of Newport, visiting among other places, the Lime Rock Lights, where Mr. COLFAX was introduced to Miss IDA LEWIS, the heroine who has at various times saved eleven lives at the risk of her own.

The steamship Rosaria, which left Hamburg June 12, reached this port last evening with about 400 passengers. Captain FRAENKEL has our thanks for late German papers.

Two small boys were caught in the store of CHARRIER & IVES, in Nassau-street, last evening, having entered by the basement. They had succeeded in breaking open the money drawer.

The post-mortem examination of JAMES CONNOR, who was brutally stabbed in the abdomen on Saturday evening at the tenement-house No. 307 East Forty-seventh-street, was taken by Coroner SCHMAN yesterday. The wounded man is believed to be in a dying condition.

Sources of Strength in the Canvass.

It is fortunate for the Republican Party that the general policy of Congress, and the course marked out by General GRANT for his Administration, furnish precisely those elements of strength which most readily commend themselves to the favor of the people. While the more thoughtful of the Democrats are engaged in the almost hopeless task of weaning their party from its worn-out traditions, and inspiring it with an appreciation of new issues, the Republicans may confidently point to what they have accomplished, and what they are doing, as evidence of ability to satisfy the requirements of the country. These requirements we take mainly to be, the introduction of honesty and purity into the administration of the Government, economy in every branch of the public service, the improvement of the public credit, a readjustment and large reduction of taxation, and the earliest possible completion of the business of reconstruction. Enough has occurred to show that on each point the popular wish is reflected in the measures of Congress and the work to which the Administration, during its brief existence, has faithfully applied itself.

To estimate properly what has been effected it is necessary to keep in mind the condition to which the rule of ANDREW JOHNSON had reduced public affairs. His conflict with Congress entailed other evils than those connected with reconstruction. The entire service of the Government was demoralized. Expenditures were kept up to the war standard long after the exigencies which occasioned them had passed away. Corruption pervaded every department. The revenue service was largely in the hands of imbeciles and knaves. Organized fraud turned into private channels streams that should have found their way into the Treasury. Thus while all forms of expenditure, civil and military, were maintained on an extravagant scale, the collection of the revenue everywhere suffered from the operations of swindlers and thieves. Integrity seemed to have been banished from the service where it was most needed, and the revenue service became a scandal to the Government, and a source of constant and ruinous loss.

The advent to power of General GRANT wrought an immediate change. Congress had performed its share of the work called for with an energy against which outgoing Secretaries had peevishly remonstrated. The appropriations were largely cut down. The army was greatly reduced, and a plan inaugurated which will reduce it further. The navy was shorn of its costliness. And effective means were adopted to carry the same practice of economy into every department. All that was possible in this direction may not have been accomplished by Congress; but nearly all was done that seemed to be expedient until the results of earnest coöperation on the part of the Executive had been fairly tested. A period less than four months is too brief to develop these results fully. But it has sufficed to bring about great reforms, and to justify sanguine expectations as to the working of a Republican Administration.

General GARFIELD, in a speech delivered the other day at Columbus, sketched some of the more striking characteristics of the four months' effort. First, as to the revenue. Its collection has been transferred to capable and honest men. The rascally "Rings" which so long controlled it have been broken up, and reforms have been brought into play with immediate advantage to the Treasury. Although the first three quarters of the fiscal year yielded but $256,000,000, the current quarter will yield not less than $100,000,000, or $20,000,000 more than was received in any single quarter under JOHNSON. The whisky tax exemplifies the change in detail. In May, 1868, the total manufacture gave to the revenue but $1,500,000, whereas last month it produced $4,500,000, with thirty-six collection districts yet to be heard from. And every branch of the revenue service exhibits proportionate improvement. With the revenue thus rendered more productive, we may confidently anticipate material reductions in taxes next session.

Turning to the expenditure side of the account, General GARFIELD'S statements are equally suggestive. During the first three quarters of the present fiscal year the expenditures amounted to $256,000,000, or an average exceeding $85,000,000. On the other hand, in the current quarter they will not exceed $60,000,000, or $25,000,000 less than in any other quarter of the year. Not only, then, will the Congressional appropriations, reduced as they were, meet the wants of the Government under General GRANT, but there will be a surplus of some $87,000,000, and the nuisance of deficiency bills appears likely to be avoided for the first time in years. Meanwhile, too, the reduction of the public debt goes on, and the Treasury management, though not absolutely free from defects, commands a degree of public confidence which best testifies to its integrity.

These are considerations which tax-payers will appreciate. They are evidence of an intelligent performance of duty on the part of Congress and of zeal, judgment and integrity on the part of the Administration. The Democrats may invent new issues, if they can. The Republican Party, in the discussion of national affairs, may point with well-grounded satisfaction to what it is doing in the matter of economy, and to the foundations it is laying for the measures of relief which trade and industry unitedly demand. Its strength is in its works, and these will endure scrutiny.

Our Government and the Cuban Struggle.

The ground which our Government has taken from the start, and still maintains, regarding the Cuban struggle, is simply that of duty under the admitted requirements of international law. As it did not, on the one hand, render any officious, premature aid to the Spanish authorities in ferreting out "Cuban sympathizers," so, on the other hand, it has not fallen short of its full duty in promptly checking any known designs to violate international law. The assertion of a contemporary that the Government "raised false hopes in the Cuban sympathizers which it now as cruelly crushes" is as unfounded as it is unjust. The chances of success in the Cuban movement never were taken into consideration, as we have been given to understand, in any Cabinet consultation as to what Governmental duty required.

For ourselves, we see no inconsistency whatever in the present marked activity of the authorities in preventing violations of the law, as contrasted with any previous conduct of the same authorities. What our Government declined to do, in the first instance, was to proceed to harsh measures on mere suspicion; when, however, direct information, of a sort that could be efficiently acted upon, was furnished to it by the Spanish Minister, of intended criminality, it acted instantly and satisfactorily. And one proof of the good faith which our Government has maintained toward Spain as a friendly Power, is the satisfaction of its official representatives in this country. Contrast this with the experience of Mr. ADAMS in London in 1861 and 1862.

On the other hand, it is due to our Government to observe that it has had a twofold difficulty—a popular and a geographical difficulty—in maintaining its straightforwardness regarding the Cuban question. On the one hand, our people have sympathized heartily with the Cuban cause,—and so, doubtless, individually, have the members of the Administration, which, unlike its predecessors, agrees cordially with a majority of the people, both in foreign and domestic political questions. On the other hand, the proximity of Cuba to our coast, our enormous sea-board line, the large number of restless and adventurous spirits whom the war left in our large cities, and the great number of our resident Cubans, have made it difficult to discover plots for unlawful expeditions. Nevertheless, as we have said, the Spanish authorities have had no reason to complain of their information being slighted.

Now, of the alleged cases of "neglect of duty" which some papers, for partisan purposes, have set in array against our Government, the greater part will be found to involve no neglect at all. We have before explained how the selling of arms in open market, and similar procedures, had been misunderstood or misrepresented as infractions of law by some of our contemporaries. And as for the very few "hostile expeditions" which have really started from our ports, those that were not checked were not known until they had safely escaped. It was after their departure that even the papers got wind of them. The truth is that the Government's honesty and rectitude of purpose in the Cuban matter have been made manifest; and the very disagreeableness of its duty should secure it praise. As for the unfair pretence of the World that the late activity of the Government was caused by a decline in Cuban prospects, it is contradicted by facts. Cuban prospects for independence were never brighter than now.

The Grand Trip in One Chapter.

We publish a vivid and picturesque letter from our correspondent "W. S.," describing the grand sweep across the continent from the Missouri to the Pacific, from Omaha to San Francisco. The newspaper letters that we have heretofore noticed concerning this great tour have been fragmentary,—giving but accounts from one point or another on the line; and this, we believe, is the first complete account in one letter of the through trip over the Pacific Railroad. The time occupied by our correspondent was but four days; and it may be seen that the journey can be made not only a pleasant one, as regards personal comfort, but supremely enjoyable in view of the spectacular opportunities it furnishes to the poetical and idealistic traveler. We are glad that our correspondent gives anew the impressions that are made on the mind of a fresh observer by the great Plains of the trans-Missouri region, as well as by the region of the immense mountains,—those mighty rock-masses that seem to have been thrown roughly up against the sky's face in some splendid accession of primeval wrath. Not, on the one hand, that we have not already had scores of writers who have told about them—nor, on the other hand, that any description could convey any idea of them to the untraveled reader. But that this account will, in its place, help to attract travelers, and adventurers, and pleasure-seekers, and emigrants and business people to that western half of our country of which the world at large, and even the American people, know so little. Those in search of adventure can find it to their heart's content in our plains and mountains; those who desire novelty and wonder can find them there; those who, like Antæus, would renew their strength by contact with the earth, have the opportunity there; those in quest of space for life and breath, can have it there. We are surprised that now, when there are such facilities of reaching the far West, parties of adventurous young fellows have not been got up this Summer for excursions from our Eastern cities to the Plains and mountains, where the buffalo and the antelope and the prairie chicken and the elk and the black-tailed deer, can be found in quantity enough to satisfy the most carnivorous hunter, or the sportsman who is fondest of the wild and glorious reveries of the chase. How can a live young man dawdle for months at a fashionable watering-place when three days will take him to the Plains, and another day or two will take him out where there is game worthy of his nerve and his rifle, and among scenes where he will catch from nature its bounding life? If the idea were started among our business men, and a few parties of five, ten or twenty were made up to go off and enjoy themselves in this fashion, we venture to say that they would be more benefited by it than they will be in the holiday hotels, and have better relaxation from the cares of life than by any other way of spending their season.

As for the trip to the Pacific that our correspondent describes, it is a trip that seems to be enjoyed by the hundreds who daily make it. We understand that the body of travel over the new road is unexpectedly large; and there is every reason to believe that the past progress of the development of the far West will be greatly surpassed by the progress of the next few years.

Will the Negro Work?—Co-operation at the South.

It is remarkable what important changes or even revolutions occur within a country, while its inhabitants are hardly aware of them. In a large section of this country a profound economic revolution is passing, and one of the greatest of social problems is being settled, and yet the mass of our people scarcely know anything of it.

"Whether the negro will work," and what is to be the future condition of production in the South, ought to be the first of all questions to our business community, yet we venture to say that to neither can the most of our readers give any trustworthy answer.

Much of the information also which reaches here through social channels of the condition of the South is peculiarly unreliable. Travelers or Southerners visiting the North usually report the prejudices and disappointment of the upper classes at the great social revolution, and really know little of what the negro has accomplished. The most trustworthy informants are the business-house, who have no sympathy, either for or against emancipation, and who are forced by business interests to obtain exact information on this important matter.

Accounts from the best of these sources show that the results of emancipation throughout the South have been, in an economic view, astonishingly and unexpectedly successful.

In the Jamaica emancipation, it will be remembered that the negroes were put at a great disadvantage by two events, one the gradual nature of emancipation, and the other the fall of sugar in the British markets, especially owing to a great reduction of the duties.

American emancipation has had the immense advantage of its being full and complete, and of a high price of the great Southern staple since the civil war. The consequences of the latter are, that both planter and negro have been paid handsomely, especially during the past year; and thus this peasantry, suddenly placed in new relations to the employing class, have found any arrangement they may have formed with it profitable and mutually satisfactory.

For some years, now, the South has been cultivated under a system of coöperation. That is, the employer pays his laborers according to yield, giving them, say one-fourth of the cotton crop in lieu of wages and food, or one-third if they support themselves. Had the price of the crop fallen badly, so that on some years both employers and employed had lost, the negroes would have become suspicious and discouraged, and would have attributed to the planters what was the fault of the market, and perhaps have abandoned cotton-growing, or have permanently separated themselves from the capital of the country.

They would have become poor also, and all the vices of poverty would have sprung up. We should have soon heard of a vast idle proletaire class in the South, and of the "curses of emancipation." But, providentially, from various causes, cotton has usually been high, or, if it has fallen, the loss has not come upon the South.

The results of coöperation have been the same in Southern agriculture that they have in some branches of English manufacture. We hear of such instances as these:

One planter in Georgia has forty-five laborers, formerly slaves of his own. He will leave them for months at a time, and return to find everything going on, even better than it used to under the lash of the overseer. There is no waste, no idleness, little carelessness, because each one knows that his own return will depend on the amount of the crop. Whereas formerly there used to be a vast deal of cotton lost by waste and carelessness, now there is nothing. When he is at home, "he never even is obliged to call his workmen in the morning," but finds his horse saddled, and all the men off to field long before he is up. "His life is a different thing from what it ever was before; it is perfect comfort in comparison." Under this arrangement both master and men are growing rich. One hand alone has $900 deposited with him, and will probably soon buy a farm of his own.

Such instances as this of Southern coöperation under free labor are reported everywhere, though the experiment seems to have been most successful in Georgia, which will produce this year probably more cotton than it ever did under slavery.

The condition of the South may be judged of from the fact that though she only produced half the crop she used to before the war, she received for it last year $350,000,000, or $95,000,000 in gold more than she ever obtained for her largest crop under slavery. This immense sum also has come in cash, mainly into the pockets of the laboring class, for all classes were out of debt. Probably no laboring class in the world was better paid the past year. This vast payment of wages has made a singular change in the economic condition of the South. An extended retail trade has sprung up in the interior, and the retailers have somewhat taken the place of the old "factors;" that is, they sell their goods direct for cotton, paying even more than the market price, and making their profit from the high prices of their wares.

Under this barter the planter receives his payment at once, and the retailer either sells to agents of cotton-houses, or forwards himself to market. A continual trade is thus kept up, and many interior towns are growing to a high degree of prosperity. The negroes are no longer contented with the former poor articles which were furnished them, but demand what may be called "second-class goods," and many luxuries. Poor jewelry is in great request. Undoubtedly a great deal of money is hoarded by the negroes, with the idea of eventually purchasing land, which may account for the fact that so much money seems absorbed in the South and does not return here.

What effect the general purchase of freeholds by the laboring class of the Southern States would have on the production of the great staple, is not yet clear. Its favorable moral and political effect could not be doubted by an American.

The industrial future of the former slave States looks increasingly promising, and the effect of their prosperity will reach every branch of business at the North.

Leaves and Fishes.

The schedule of the June changes made in the New-York Custom-house by Collector GRINNELL, and approved by Secretary BOUTWELL, which we published yesterday, gives a lively idea of the humbler prizes over which patriots struggle. In the hundred and more offices comprised in the list, there are four choice ones that yield $2,500 per annum; four others that yield $2,000; but the rest fall down from $1,800 to $900, with the majority set at $3 or $4 per diem.

It is, of course, at once apparent what singular attractions this list offers to the young and ambitious soul. With the post of an "examiner," a "verifier," an "opener" or a "sampler," to stimulate effort, with $3 50 per diem, or $750 per annum, held up as the glittering prize before his vision, what cannot the ardent and adventurous ward politician accomplish? What canvassing will he not do, what "slates" will he not make or break, what votes will he not bully or coax, what aid will he not buy, treats stand, hacks hire, split-tickets print at his own expense? Such honor, such position, and such overflowing wealth were surely worth a man's running a month in sun and rain, to get names to his petition, or additions to his string of credentials. General GRANT has made the observation, from recent experience, that "office-seeking has come to be one of the industries of America." We are confident that it would be much more universally so, were the true nature and extent of the prizes that are offered, well known. It is true that there are about ten times as many hungry applicants as the loaves and fishes can satisfy, and also that not all the Governmental offices are of the highly-lucrative nature we now name. However, this only makes success a better index and token of merit. Rush, youth of America, to "inspect" at $3 per nocturn or "open" at $3 per diem.

Importers and the Government.

Some two years ago a controversy occurred between the importing merchants of this City and the Treasury Department in relation to suits brought against the Collector of the Port to recover back duties alleged to have been illegally exacted. The merchants claimed—and we thought at the time that they had some reason for their claim—that the Government, in its conduct of those suits, was more technical than equitable. If our readers will look in our legal columns they will find a decision in such a case, which, though just rendered, dates back to the time of that controversy, and which we think, shows that the complaints of the importers were not without reason.

The case was this: Suit was commenced nine years ago against an Ex-Collector to recover back duties illegally exacted. There was no doubt about the illegality of the exaction, and a verdict was rendered against him. The practice had grown up in such cases of taking a general verdict and having the Collector make up, from the papers at the Custom-house, the amount of the duties which had been illegally exacted on all the various importations by the plaintiff, and on that statement of the amount due, the judgment was entered. That course was pursued in this case. The Collector's report was made in due time, judgment for the amount of it was rendered against him, which the Government paid, and the judgment was satisfied of record in the Fall of 1862. Some months after, the plaintiff discovered that the Custom-house officers in making up their amount that was due him, had assumed to leave out many items which should have gone into that account. He had had no part in making up the amount, but had relied entirely upon the correctness of the figures reported by the Collector, and naturally enough, sought to have the error, if it was one, corrected, and the true amount paid to him. He first brought a new suit to recover these items. The Government set up, not that the money had not been illegally taken from him, but that his suit was barred by the Statute of Limitations, and this defence, ungracious though it was, the Court felt itself constrained by the law to sustain. These proceedings took until the Spring of 1867, and the plaintiff having failed in his new suit, then moved to open the judgment in the old one, and have the errors corrected. The decision of Judge SMALLEY granting this motion is the one to which we have referred.

If the Judge had refused to open a judgment which was rendered seven years ago, on the ground that if there were any error in it, it resulted from the folly of the plaintiff in leaving it to the defendant alone to fix the amount for which judgment should be rendered against him, we cannot see that the plaintiff would have had the right to complain. But the Judge has seen fit to relieve him from the consequences of that folly, probably on the ground that so many others were up to that time foolish in the same way, and certainly no one can say that the correction of the error is inequitable, if the Court had the power to open the judgment. There is no discussion of the question of power in the Judge's decision, and inasmuch as it appears that that power was not denied, such a discussion was hardly to be expected. But one would say on first thought, that a judgment which had been for seven years paid up and satisfied, ought to be beyond the power of resurrection.

The Judge closes his decision with some remarks which we must say would not have been entirely uncalled for under the past administration of these Custom-house matters. We hope that there has been a change for the better, and that equity and fair dealing, instead of technicality and arbitrariness, will characterize the future dealings of the Government with the importers.

Cholera and Yellow Fever Among Cuban Volunteers.

The steamship Quaker City, as reported in our columns yesterday, left this port on Saturday night last with eight hundred recruits, and with a supply of arms and other munitions of war for the Cuban army. At the same time the telegraph informs us that cholera and yellow fever are raging in Cuba to such an extent as to have effected a tacit truce between the contending armies in that island. As the Cuban Junta in this City has repeatedly proclaimed that it was not men, but arms and other munitions of war that were needed to enable the Cubans to achieve their independence, we submit that, if this be true, common humanity requires that they should cease their efforts for the recruitment of volunteers in this country, who, unacclimated as they are, will in a majority of cases of those who succeed in reaching Cuba at all, fall easy victims to the twin epidemics which are now rapidly decimating both armies. We warn these gentlemen of the Junta that persistence in this reckless disregard of the lives of adventurous and enthusiastic young men will go far to deprive the cause of Cuban independence of that sympathy which it has hitherto received in this country. They must know that these recruits, entirely unaccustomed to a tropical climate, will be utterly worthless for military operations in Cuba for the next four months, and that the enemy they will have to meet is not the Spaniard, but death by cholera and yellow fever.

Mr. Gilmore and the Boston Jubilee.

Will the wonders of the great Peace Festival never cease? We now are told that, in spite of the prodigious expenses of the enterprise, the pecuniary result, contrary to the expectation of those most nearly interested, is a profit of more than one hundred thousand dollars. This alone was needed to complete the triumph of the Bostonians, and to add fresh acrimony to the chorus of defiance and disdain which they still persist in hurling forth to the rest of the world, and to New-York in particular. The comfortable sum of $110,700 remains in the hands of the Committee, who with a liberality which one individual at least will warmly appreciate, have announced their purpose of bestowing a good part of it upon the indefatigable projector, Mr. P. S. GILMORE. It is, indeed, hinted that Mr. GILMORE was not unaware of this intention from the beginning, and that his untiring efforts to secure a colossal success may have been to some extent inspired by less etherial motives than the advancement of art and the celebration of the return of peace. However this may be, Boston is sufficiently content with his achievements to establish him for life with a neat little property, and furthermore, to bind him to herself forever by the gift of a $35,000 house and lot in the heart of the city. This last manifestation of generosity, we are told, is offered in mitigation of Mr. GILMORE'S sufferings from the sneers and gibes which heartless critics from abroad have leveled at him. It is an ill wind that blows nobody good, and, for this worthy gentleman's sake, we are almost tempted to wish that the World, and other hostile journals, had spread their scorn still thicker while they were about it. With very little additional trouble they might have made him the possessor of a brown-stone palace on Commonwealth-avenue, a yacht surpassing in splendor Commodore FOLLETT'S famous Nettle, and the finest private stud in Massachusetts. If the Jubilee had lasted a fortnight, instead of a week, they might even have secured him the succession to Dr. SHURTLEFF'S municipal throne.

For this, however, it is now too late. The Jubilee has ceased to be a vital topic in New-York, although the Boston newspapers dwell upon it with unabated ardor, as becomes the chroniclers of a city in which exciting events are happily few. Rage against New-York is still the burden of their daily song, and their news columns are chiefly occupied with extracts of actual or supposed disrespectful meaning. Precisely as the heads of Corsican families train their children to the vendetta by suppressing every conciliatory action of their enemies, so do the Boston journals artfully withhold every expression of congratulation and praise, and stimulate their own and their readers' wrath by perpetual reproductions of obnoxious paragraphs. The sensitiveness of KRAYS resides in each Athenian editors' breast. Common sense, the journalists' "divinest particle," has been snuffed out of all of them by a few distasteful articles. We of New-York have done the best we can. We have said we are sorry and promised not to misbehave in like manner again—in which we are safe enough, as there will probably never be a second Peace Jubilee—but nothing avails. Boston is as relentless in her demands upon us as Mr. SUMNER in the terms he wishes to impose upon Great Britain. We must not only make public profession of penitence for sins we are all unconscious of having committed, but we must formally prostrate ourselves, and submit our necks to the pressure of Boston's revengeful heel. This being done, she will smile upon us as she was wont to smile. But whether it is worth while going through so much to gain so little, as Mr. Weller says, is a serious question. Like him, we rather think it isn't.

One thing is certain, although our hot-tempered friends have not yet discovered it—that the only trustworthy reports of the musical results of their undertaking, and the only appreciative estimates of the artistic good that may proceed from it, have appeared outside of their own city. All that has yet been published among themselves is simply calculated to make the whole affair ridiculous. The wildness of their rhapsodies has driven some or two of their critical writers to an opposite extreme. Thus, Mr. JOHN S. DWIGHT, who represents the conservative musical sentiment of Boston, and whose convictions are therefore naturally opposed to all boisterous demonstrations in support of which the name of music may be lightly taken, gives, in the Tribune, an exhaustive review of the proceedings, in which, while acknowledging many unexpected merits, he unsparingly decides the extravagant temper which appears to have animated the leading managers of the festival from beginning to end. But in the endeavor to dissociate himself from the mass of blind devotees, Mr. DWIGHT exhibits unnecessary severity. He was one of the original skeptics, and he takes pains to explain at great length why he could not lend the project his countenance. All this is now superfluous. Nine connoisseurs out of every ten predicted that the musical results would be contemptible. They found they were wrong, and were glad of the opportunity to record a success. And it is unfair, in the light of accomplished facts, to cast ridicule upon the methods by which these facts were made possible. Mr. GILMORE'S advertisements may have been too exuberant to satisfy a strict rhetorical taste, but the time for considering that question has passed. The end has justified his means. Musicians are indebted to him for having afforded a definite solution of certain delicate and important problems which had long been subjects of uneasy discussion. The people of New-England are grateful to him for having enabled them to demonstrate the extent of their musical resources and to excite the astonishment of the musical world by producing, at short notice, a chorus numbering 11,000 voices, and capable of interpreting the works of the greatest composers. And, last of all, Boston is proud of him for giving her the opportunity of proclaiming with perfect truth, and an entire absence of modesty, her power to carry through a vaster musical undertaking than was ever before attempted, or ever will be or ought to be attempted again. For all these services, not to speak of his Briarean exertions in conducting the Anvil Chorus, what less substantial reward could justly be offered him than fifty thousand dollars in cash and twenty five thousand dollars' worth of real property? For great deeds, great bounty. Boston could never have allowed the compensation of the projector to be the one small incident of the gigantic celebration.

MINOR TOPICS.

The three excellent new public markets that have been opened up town, will soon deprive of importance the abominable market shanties down town. The down-town markets are inconvenient as well as offensive, and are so far away from the centres of population, the business must soon leave them. The country produce, the fruits and vegetables, the fish and butcher meats, will be taken directly to the up-town markets, and cheapness will be added to their other attractions of convenience and cleanliness. Thus we are in a fair way for the settlement by private enterprise of our long-standing market troubles, without the assistance of the Legislature or the interference of the Common Council.

There need be no fear that the Democratic Party will fail to secure such supplies of folly as will continue to insure its defeat. Here, now, for example, is GOLLADAY, Democratic member of Congress from Kentucky, coming out (according to the report in that excellent Democratic authority, the Louisville Courier) "squarely in favor of repudiation, without any circumlocution whatever." The speech which he has just delivered in favor of it at Frankfort was "frequently greeted with rounds of applause," and, no doubt, will be greeted in like manner by hundreds of thousands of Democrats throughout the country. We shall see how this sort of thing will help the Democrats in Pennsylvania and Ohio, and we shall by-and-by see how much it will help them throughout the country.

The letter to General SICKLES, requesting him to name a time for the reception, was signed by numerous eminent lawyers, leading bankers and merchants, and gentlemen of high social position, without distinction of party. Among the Democrats are to be found the names of the veteran Edwin Croswell, Isaac Bell, Richard Schell, Geo. W. Quintard, James Murphy, John B. Haskin, George Shea, John Graham, and many others.

Provision will have to be made for the more thorough supervision of the Croton and its tributaries. The Courts have very promptly taken up the cases of those who polluted the stream which we drink by erecting on its banks gas-works, outhouses, &c., and Justice BARNARD, at the Putnam County Circuit Court, has given notice that it must be understood that no one has a right to pollute the waters of a running stream, and that such conduct would not be allowed, as it was at variance with the common law. But there is another cause of pollution and disease which requires different treatment. A correspondent writes us from Putnam County regarding a point that demands attention. After saying that the Croton passes through the eastern portion of that valley, and that there is but very little fall for five miles, owing to the rocky obstructions at its south end, he adds:

"These obstructions cause the water to flow back over three or four thousand acres of land, which are thereby rendered swampy, and the water is exposed to the rays of the sun, mingled with hemlock, laurel, hellebore, nightshade and other poisonous vegetable substances, making a tincture that Macbeth's witches could revel in without wishing any more malignant ingredients."

Our correspondent says that a very little engineering skill would remedy the evil, and keep the Croton within its proper channel. By removing a portion of the rocky bed of the stream, sufficient fall could be made to carry off the water briskly. The improvement could be made at a very small outlay. He adds that apparently the Croton Department wholly overlooks the upper waters of the citizen. There are several good-sized lakes that might be added to the volume of the Croton, greatly increasing the supply of water to the City and improving its quality.

During the present heated term several persons have been prostrated in the streets by the rays of the sun, and three of these, we believe, have died from the effects of the stroke. These occurrences should remind people to be careful to avoid those irregularities of life which induce this fatal malady. Persons should be temperate in eating and drinking, and if necessarily exposed to the sun should have cabbage-leaves or damp cloths in their hats. Over-exertion, with copious draughts of bad whisky or of iced water, produces nearly all of the cases which are recorded. "A word to the wise should be sufficient."

The religious public was greatly excited about eighteen months ago, by the detection of a pretender named OFFRADINE, who, representing himself as a City missionary, succeeded in duping scores of persons, in as many churches, out of large sums of money, which he said were to be applied to various benevolent objects. He was finally arrested, and upon his trial it was proven that he was a veteran swindler, whose confidence games had been carried on in nearly every State in the Union. He was sentenced to State Prison, from which he has lately been released, and we are informed that he is at his old tricks again. He is a respectable-looking person, of fluent speech and fascinating manners and should be arrested wherever found.

The leading Chinamen in California have asked Congress to secure protection and equal rights for Chinese emigrants, and also that the subsidy to the China steamship line shall be increased, so that semi-monthly trips may be made. We learn from a gentleman who has recently arrived here from China, that there is hardly any limit to the number of Chinamen who are ready to emigrate to this country. We get our hundreds of thousands annually from Germany and Ireland; but we can get our millions annually from China. It is a serious question how far they ought to be encouraged, or permitted, to come. We must not overlook the fact that there are considerations of blood, morals, and free politics, as well as of cheap labor and industrial economy.

It is curious to observe that our New-York Post Office always sends to Europe a much greater number of letters than it receives from that part of the world. For the month of May, it sent away 430,889 letters and received 361,062. This seems to show that the mass of the foreigners settled in this country write home to their old friends oftener than the latter write to them. That rule, however, is broken in a single instance. The Italians send home but 4,869 letters for 7,088 brought over to them. Are they more hard-hearted than the rest of mankind? Or do they refrain from writing till Italy shall be entirely free, with Rome for its capital?

The Russian Czar seems very courteously disposed toward our people just now. In the first place, one of his naval squadrons, under the command of Admiral ERSENTOFF, is ordered to come into the Atlantic and visit the principal ports of our Eastern seaboard. In the next, mindful of what is due to a brother potentate, he has transmitted—perhaps the Admiral will bring it—a piece of artillery to President GRANT embossed with the names of those places where General GRANT obtained his victories over the rebels in the late commotions. Of course, as the General is known to be for peace, this cannon is meant to be merely what SHELLEY calls "a metaphor of peace."

The Spanish journals are circulating a curious report to the effect that the Prince of Asturias is to marry the English Princess BEATRICE, a lady of his own age; that he is to be King and she Queen of Spain—Donna ISABELLA abdicating—and that in consequence of such a very propitious alliance, the British Government will restore Gibraltar to the Spanish monarchy. This is such a very romantic sort of arrangement that we should not have alluded to it, if we were sure that those dynastic and diplomats of the ancient West could really make a better one.

The Japanese now coming into California promise to be a most valuable order of immigrants. Those who have purchased the six hundred acres of the Adza Ranch will be quite an industrial colony, cultivating the tea-plant, the silk-worm and its tree, the bamboo esculents which will taste like a mixture of artichoke and asparagus, and the fish harvests which will be nourished in large lime-cemented tanks or lakes. Their Japan silk-worms feed on the oak and other trees, producing a beautiful gray silk, and their tea-nuts give "China oil," which makes such a clear pure light. The Japanese are altogether the best instructed immigrants coming to our shores.

We do not care to revive old stories, but are compelled to refer to the case of "Reddy the Blacksmith" once more. We should like to know what our immaculate Sheriff has done in the matter of the forfeited recognizance of that fugitive vagabond. Recorder HACKETT several days ago directed the seizure of the house which was given as security for "Reddy's" appearance for trial. Why hasn't the order been enforced? or was there a secret understanding among the authorities in relation to the matter? By the way, while speaking of this subject, we may ask, also, why the bench warrant for Reddy's rearrest was placed in the hands of Captain JOURDAN instead of Captain THORNE, in whose precinct the ruffian belonged?

The elation of the advance guard of Boston reformers over the selection of a young lady to read the Declaration of Independence at the approaching celebration of the Fourth of July, is now rivaled by the rapture with which steadfast conservative citizens receive the announcement that an ode by Mr. GEORGE LUNT will form a part of the ceremonies. The Radical Party declare that the feminine appointment is, at best, a mere abstract acknowledgment of their claims, while the recognition of Mr. LUNT is a direct and personal affront to the convictions of all who believe that if the example of that gentleman and his political associates had prevailed at any period during the war, there would by this time have been no National Anniversary to commemorate at all. The solid men of Boston vouchsafe no verbal retort, being sufficiently self-assured in the consideration that while the young lady's performance must of necessity be confined to the recital of a formal document, Mr. LUNT can have it all his own way in the Ode, and restore the shaken equilibrium of the social sphere in whatever manner may best suit his poetic fancy. From all of which we gather that the peaceful influences of Mr. GILMORE's Jubilee had no effect upon the old political firebrands of the New-England metropolis.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

The worthiest entertainments which the City now affords may be found at Booth's Theatre, where Mr. ADAMS nightly repeats his fine impersonation of Sweet Archer, and at the Fifth-avenue Theatre, where the excellent company from Boston appear in the drama of "Dora" and the burlesque of "Black-Eyed Susan." The performances of Mr. STUART ROBSON and his associates in this last bit of theatrical drollery is as much more amusing than that of the original representatives in London, as the movements of a group of intelligent human beings are more diverting and agreeable than those of a fantoccini show. Miss LUCILLE WESTERN continues to invite attention to the partially institutes order of drama, in which she shines, at the Grand Opera House; and, at Wood's Museum, Mr. E. EDDY appeals to the "sensational" taste with a revival of "The Wandering Jew." Wallack's Theatre will be occupied for six nights longer with the Lotos Troupe, where pantomime will this evening be preceded by a new extravaganza entitled "Respect the Reckless." On the 5th inst. their engagement is to be replaced by that [illegible] the attraction at the Fifth-avenue. Dramatic performances have been discontinued at the Wheatley, and an acrobatic troupe, the DE LAVE family, will this evening appear there for the first time. At the Olympic, Mr. FOX supplies fresh mirth each evening from his inexhaustible reservoir of humor. Mr. W. E. GETTYSBURG.

Preparations for the Dedication of the Soldiers' Monument.

Its History and Description—Present Aspect of the Battle-field—Accommodations for Visitors to the Town—Excursion Trains, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

GETTYSBURG, Saturday, June 26, 1869.

Standing this morning at sunrise beside the monument that is being reared on the apex of Cemetery Hill, marking the spot that General HOWARD's forethought seized on Wednesday, July 1, 1863, I realized that I stood on the pivotal ground of the greatest war in history. The battle, with all its horror and glory rose from the gathered mists of six eventful years, and looking down the range of hills that bends backward, southwest and southeast, from this spot, I sought for some visible sign of those terrible days when these hillocks were paved with stilled or writhing men, and each one of all these summits was endowed with death. But I only saw the hills and the undulating valley, burdened with waving grain and meadows ripe for the sickle. Across the valley was Seminary Ridge, where LEE's ragged rebels made wild havoc of fences and fields, but now with no sign, save of peaceful rural toil. Along the opposite, irregular range of hills, from Round Top to Cemetery, where MEADE stayed the rebel tide forever, there is scarcely a vestige left of the terrible conflict. All the débris of a great battle has disappeared everywhere from the hillsides and valleys, and not from Waterloo has the rough imprint of war been more thoroughly removed than from Gettysburg. The old borough town itself was between the contending armies, and although lapped by the very fiercest flame of battle, it shows outwardly no impress of its terrible experience. It is now the same quiet, primeval shire town as before the war, and those July days of six years agone seem nothing more than the awful phantasmagora of a fever-dream.

I know it is the fashion to burden newspapers with interesting stories of the frightful ravages of war to be seen here on every side; but speaking of things exactly as I find them, I have not been able to follow in this rutted road. True it is that the obtrusive searcher, looking minutely everywhere, can find here and there a tree that an expert might say had been riven by a cannon-shot, or another that seems to be pitted with Minie balls; or he might find some dented rocks, or tumuli of earth that serves for graves, or the remains of rifle-pits and earth-works, as the imagination happens to elect. But maugre all these, the casual visitor cannot come here and by anything he sees have the conviction forced upon him that he stands on ground where 180,000 men met in deadly conflict. In fine, whoever finds here vestiges of the battle, left by the battle itself, earnestly searches for them, predetermined to find them. Who comes as I have seen only the sweet rural landscape of an undulating valley, bounded west and south by a wooded mountain range, only fair fields and beeding meadows, only perfect fences and barns and houses and unravaged roads, and he hears only the hum of insect life, the twitter of the birds, the sweet low sounds of rural toil, mingled with the clatter of a machine-reaper going over the ground where LEE encamped and REYNOLDS fell, and cutting close to the soil where MEADE mowed down an over-tasked rebellion.

THE NATIONAL CEMETERY.

There is a memento of the battle that survives, and will for ages. On the western slope of Cemetery Hill, arranged in a semi-circle around the central plot for the monument, sleep 3,555 of the Union patriots who fell at Gettysburg. These sleeping patriots belong to the States of Maine, New-Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota; but 979 sleep as the common and precious property of all the loyal States, for their graves are marked only with that saddest of war's epitaphs, "Unknown." Standing in the monumental plot, the prevailing expression of the scene is that of simple grandeur. Elbow to elbow, as they fought in life, these dead patriots lie peacefully awaiting the promised end of earth. The closely-shaven grass covers them as with a rich green mantle, and as the eye goes over the rows of circling, swarded graves it meets no abrupt contrasts, but everywhere simplicity, harmony, beauty. There are no dwarfed, unsightly stones marking specific graves, but the dead of a State are buried together in sections, and each section is marked by a plain granite slab scarcely protruding above the ground. On the plan of the Cemetery each grave is numbered, and the name of the sleeper it contains is carefully recorded in the books of the Commissioners, and the individuality of the dead—if the term can be allowed—is thus rigidly preserved.

The idea of this cemetery was evolved from the smoke of the battle itself, and originated with Hon. DAVID WILLS, of Gettysburg. By his energy as the State Agent, aided by the zealous cooperation of Governor CURTIN, of Pennsylvania, the dead were collected from the wide expanse of the battle-field and buried in the ground where they now lie, which had been previously purchased for the purpose by the State of Pennsylvania. The States having dead on the field were invited to cooperate in the enterprise, and all gladly accepting the invitation, the Commissioners appointed by the several Governors met in convention at Harrisburg, on the 17th of December, 1863, and organized the "Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' National Cemetery at Gettysburg," by the election of DAVID WILLS, of Pennsylvania, as President, and of W. Y. SELLECK, of Wisconsin, as Secretary. It was also ordered that the ground should be held in perpetuity by the State of Pennsylvania in trust for the use for which it was purchased, and that the several States represented should make appropriations, apportioned according to representation in Congress, to defray the expense of establishing the Cemetery and erecting a monument, as well as to provide a fund to keep the grounds in repair. Subsequently, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act, approved March 28, 1864, incorporating the Board of Commissioners and clothing them with all the powers usually conferred on such bodies by laws.

Prior, however, to this official action, all the dead had been collected and buried, and on the 19th of November, 1863, the dedicatory ceremony was consecrated with imposing public ceremonies, which brought here a vast concourse of the nation's learned and best. It was then that EDWARD EVERETT delivered that admirable oration in which was embodied an account of the battle, which although prepared at that early day, is yet valuable for its accuracy as distinguished for its eloquent condensation. It was then too that President LINCOLN delivered that solemn dedicatory address of twenty lines which was a compendium no less of the double and focus that harnessed him, than of his determination to go on with the work intrusted to his hands, and in which occurs the immortal sentence: "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here."

The next great public ceremonial of Gettysburg was on the 4th of July, 1865, on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of that Soldiers' National Monument which is to be dedicated on Thursday next. It was then two years subsequent to the battle, and being in the first bright days of peace, a great crowd again flocked to the historic field, but the attendance of distinguished persons was not so great as on the prior occasion, nor were the ceremonies so impressive. The opening remarks and prayer were made by Rev. STEPHEN H. TYNG, D. D.; a letter was read from President JOHNSON, detained at Washington by sickness; and the oration having been delivered by Major-General O. O. HOWARD, an original poem was read by the author, CHARLES G. HALPINE, and the exercises were concluded by a short speech by Governor CURTIN, of Pennsylvania.

THE SOLDIERS' NATIONAL MONUMENT.

The monument now approaching completion and to be dedicated on the 1st of July is the most imposing memento of the Civil War anywhere in the country, and will not be finished at a cost of less than $80,000, although the original estimate was but $38,000. It is from designs by J. G. BATTERSON, of Hartford, Conn., who also furnished the clay models of the statuary, which were worked out in marble at Rome by RANDOLPH ROGERS. The superstructure is sixty feet high, consisting of a massive pedestal, twenty-five feet square at the base, and the die and cap crowned with a three-quarter globe, on which stands a colossal statue of the Genius of Liberty, holding in her right hand the victor's wreath of laurel, and clasping with the left a sheathed sword. Projecting from the angles of the pedestal are four buttresses, supporting the same number of allegorical statues, representing War, History, Peace and Plenty. War is personified by an American soldier, who, resting from the conflict, relates to History the story of the battle the monument commemorates, while History, with stylus and tablet, is chiseled as recording the achievements of the field. Peace is symbolized by a statue of the American mechanic, with the accessories of a cog-wheel, hammer and chisel, while Plenty is represented by a female figure, with a sheaf of wheat and fruits, as emblematic of peace and abundance as the soldier's crowning triumph. The buttresses on which these statues—which are all colossal—are seated, have the sides ornamented with bas-reliefs in unison with the idea embodied in the statue. The upper die and cap of the monument are circular, and on the die is a circlet of bronze stars made up of one for each State having dead in the cemetery. The cornice and plinth above the main die of the pedestal are octagonal and heavily moulded, and on the plinth rests an octagonal moulded base, bearing upon its face the national arms in high relief. The panel of the main die, on the west side between the statues, has engraved on it:

GETTYSBURG,
July 1, 2, 3,

While the corresponding panel on the opposite side has the following from LINCOLN's dedicatory address: "It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that the dead shall not have died in vain; that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that the Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."—LINCOLN, Nov. 19, 1863.

The monument itself is executed in granite and the five statues in marble, so that when completed it will have the same general effect as the cemetery in which it stands. But it is not yet finished, nor will it be by Thursday next, for Peace and Plenty have not yet arrived from Italy, and of the materials now on the ground only the pedestal with the buttresses and the statues of War and History have been put in place. Mr. WILLS, however, is sanguine that, except the two non-arrived statues, all will be finished in time for the final ceremonies, and as he is giving his personal attention to the work, there is reason to believe that he will not be disappointed. It is impossible, of course, to indulge in any minute criticism of the monument in its present unfinished state, but it can be said that in the expression of eager recital thrown into the face of War, and in the absorbed listening aspect and attitude of History, the sculptor has commendably worked out the idea of the designer. It is lamentable, however, that the marble of both these statues has been badly disfigured during the passage across the ocean, in consequence of gross carelessness of package and stowage, and, unsightly as they now appear, it is feared that some of the stains can never be wholly eradicated.

THE DEDICATORY CEREMONY.

The last of the series of solemn public ceremonies connected with the establishment of the Soldiers' National Cemetery is to take place on Thursday next, the 1st of July. The Committee of Arrangements, consisting of DAVID WILLS, R. H. MCCURDY, W. Y. SELLECK, BEN DEFORD and EDWARD M. DUBOIS, have concluded all the preliminaries necessary to the success of this last pageant. The programme of the day includes the opening remarks and prayer by Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, the unveiling of the monument by Major-General GEORGE G. MEADE, the oration on the progress of civil liberty in the United States during the last ten years by Senator OLIVER P. MORTON of Indiana, an original poem by BAYARD TAYLOR, and the closing prayer by Rev. E. S. SCHMUCKER, of Gettysburg. Many distinguished gentlemen have signified their intention of being present, among whom are Senator FENTON, of New-York; Governor JEWELL, of Connecticut; Ex-Governor WARD, of New-Jersey; Governor CRAPO, of Michigan; General HUMPHREYS, Governor GEARY, of Pennsylvania, and others, but Mr. WILLS has not received any notice to expect the presence of the President of the United States and other members of the National Government, all of whom have been invited.

The visiting military organizations to take part in the ceremonies will be, the Utica (N. Y.) Zouaves, the Lancaster (Penn.) Fencibles, the Harrisburg (Penn.) City Zouaves, the Chambersburg (Penn.) Hussars Zouaves, the York (Penn.) Zeikel Guards, and the two military companies of Adams County, Penn. General MEADE has suggested the possibility of the presence of a part of the militia of Philadelphia, under General PREVOST, but there is nothing certain in the matter, and the organizations mentioned, together with the Baltimore National Musical Association are all that are sure to be present, but they will be reinforced in the procession by local lodges of Freemasons, Odd Fellows, and other bodies.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR VISITORS.

The citizens of this quiet old shire town are already perplexed as to what they will do with the immense concourse of people they expect to be poured upon them on Wednesday next. The two town taverns can accommodate perhaps a hundred or so together, but it is believed that the new Gettysburg Springs Hotel, two miles west of the village, can take in 400 or 500. How Dr. SMITH, the manager, expects to perform this feat I cannot say, for his house is not yet entirely finished, and, although his carpets are down and some of the super bedrooms furnished, he has [illegible] in the kitchen, his cooks and [illegible] not organized, and I can advise [illegible] people to patience, and take comfort in the reflection that he is doing the very best he can under the circumstances. [illegible] all the public halls and [illegible] are to be opened as sleeping apartments, and the citizens very generally will open their houses for the accommodation of the strangers. Whoever comes here prepared for a little inconvenience and hardship will fare well enough; but whoever comes in the belief that he is to encounter all the little amenities of the great hotels will be woefully disappointed. If any one hungers for the sensation of sleeping in a tent on the battle-field, he can be gratified, as a large number are to be pitched.

EXCURSION TRAINS.

Ample arrangements have been made as to traveling accommodations, and excursion trains for Gettysburg will leave Boston at 9 P. M. of Monday and Tuesday, and New-York from foot of Cortlandt-street at 8:45 A. M. of Tuesday and Wednesday, going through from New-York via Philadelphia without change of cars, and arriving here at 6:15 P. M. The fare from New-York for the round trip is $10, and from Philadelphia $6 75. Excursion trains will also run from Washington, Baltimore, Harrisburg, Pittsburg and other connecting points, but I am not informed as to details concerning them. I can add, however, that all excursion tickets are good until and including the Saturday succeeding the last of the series of solemn ceremonies, which has marked the progress of the great work which is at last substantially completed.

Movements of Ex-President Johnson.

From the Knoxville (Tenn.) Press & Herald, June 25.

Mr. JOHNSON, to-day, will start from Greeneville to Washington. He goes to attend the Commencement exercises at Georgetown College, at which his youngest son is a student. He will not be absent from the State for a long period, and the people may rest assured that when he returns, his voice will be again heard in behalf of popular liberty.

Jubal A. Early on Virginia Politics.

To the Editors of the Lynchburg News:

FRANKLIN COURT-HOUSE, June 17, 1869.

I observe in your paper of the 14th a paragraph stating that I "have taken the stump for WALKER and against the Constitution." This does not correctly represent my position, and though my individual views are of little consequence to the public, yet, as I do not wish to be misunderstood by any, I take occasion to place myself right. At the last term of Franklin County Court, after Colonel MARTIN, of Henry, had made a speech, a portion of my old friends called upon me, and in response I made some remarks expressive of my views of the duty of Virginians in the approaching election. Regarding the instrument so anomalously propounded to the people of Virginia as a State Constitution by the recent proclamation of the President of the United States as, in its origin, its principles, its details, and its mode of submission, degrading to the State, destructive of its honor and interests, and subversive of all semblance of State rights, I advised the people of my native county to cast their votes against it, either as a whole or in broken dose. I told them, however, that it was not improbable that by reason of what I regarded as the unwise counsel of some of our public men the instrument would be palmed upon us either with or without the disfranchising clauses, and as, by the action of a convention recently held in Richmond, the Conservative candidates had been withdrawn, thus narrowing the contest for Governor to a choice between two Northern men who had been nominated by their respective wings of the Republican Party, and as the infamy of WELLS' character, public and private, had been fully developed and established, I advised them to cast their votes for WALKER, as a choice of evils, upon the chance of his proving better than his opponent, if for no other reason. I do not think this can be said to be "taking the stump for WALKER." The whole ticket, from its head to its tail, is objectionable and offensive to me, and the fault is not by any means the least offensive part. Dire necessity alone could induce me to urge any one to give his support to such a ticket, or any part of it. Very respectfully yours,

J. A. EARLY.

Negro Eligibility to Office in Georgia.

The Macon Telegraph, a leading Democratic paper in Georgia, frankly concedes that, by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the State, negroes are just as eligible to all civil offices as whites. In concluding an article upon the subject it says:

No well-informed man can have a doubt that the Federal Government is determined to resent the negroes in the Legislature at all hazards, and that all our opposition will be futile. The refusal of the Legislature to respect this decision of the Supreme Court will only bring about a legislative purgation by bayonets; but we should care less for that than to see the Legislature assume an independence and untenable position, against an authoritative though unsatisfactory exposition of the law; or adopt any temporary expedients which would be practically unavailing against the dominant despotism. In the midst of all our troubles let us preserve respect for law. Let us arm ourselves with patience and look forward in hope to better days.

Political Items.

Hon. PETER M. DOX is the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Fifth District of Alabama. He was a Union man during the war, but headed the Seymour and Blair electoral ticket in his State last Fall.

Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM, of Minnesota, being a candidate for the United States Senate, in place of Mr. NORTON, has withdrawn from the contest for the nomination for Governor of his State. His friends will support Judge AUSTIN, of St. Peter, for Governor.

The Democrats in Alabama claim that all their candidates for Congress were original Union men with one exception, and his disabilities have been removed.

Hon. DANIEL VORHEES has been compelled by important business matters to withdraw his acceptance of the invitation to address the Democracy of Memphis, Tenn.

An adverse report has been made in the Connecticut Legislature on the resolution to call a Constitutional Convention, the chief objection being against the form of the resolution.

The Ohio State Temperance Alliance will hold a State Convention at Urbana on the 28th of July.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says that CARY in 1869 means PENDLETON in 1872; but the Cleveland Plain Dealer says that if the nomination and election of GEORGE H. PENDLETON for President in 1872 depends upon the nomination of SAM CARY as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio in 1869, then the chances for "Young Greenbacks" in 1872 are slim indeed.

Democratic papers and politicians in Ohio are casting about for a candidate for Governor. Among those mentioned are Judge Ranney, General A. S. Piatt, Hon. Chilton A. White, Hon. Milton Saylor, General Durbin Ward, General Samuel Cary and General W. S. Rosecrans.

The Richmond Whig of Friday says: "By the registration of 1867 the blacks appeared to be able to elect a majority of twenty-one members of the House of Delegates. Albemarle with three delegates, Richmond and Henrico with eight, and Norfolk with two, showed negro majorities. But we have already information that these have been wrested from them. Thirteen from one side added to the other makes a difference of twenty-six, which gives us the House of Delegates by five. We expect to have it by fifty, and the Senate by a proportionate majority."

The Richmond Dispatch says all the prominent Democrats in Virginia, who have recently taken no part in politics, now go heartily for WALKER and against the objectionable articles of the Constitution. It mentions R. M. T. HUNTER, MOORE, of Rockbridge; CONRAD, Judge DANIEL, of Lynchburg; the GOODES, Judge ROBERTSON, of Charlottesville; Governor SMITH, General KEMPER, Judge DRUMM, Judge WILLEY, WALKER R. STAPLES, MCLAUGHLIN, of Rockbridge; DUKE JOHNSON, and others.

The Iowa papers already begin to discuss who shall be the successor of Mr. GRIMES in the United States Senate. In the Davenport Journal we find the names of Governor KIRKWOOD, Hon. J. H. WILSON, Hon. GEORGE G. WRIGHT, Hon. D. N. COOLEY, Hon. G. R. WALLET and Hon. HENRY PRICE, as candidates. It says that Governor KIRKWOOD "will never hold another office unless freely offered to him, and without so much as raising his hand to secure it"—a declaration which by no means ought to make him the less likely to succeed; that Mr. WILSON "is the only man in Iowa who could obtain the position without raising a finger to secure it;" that Mr. WRIGHT would fill the position with as much honor as any man in the State; that Mr. COOLEY ought not to suffer his name to be used; that Mr. WALLET is favorably known all over the State, and that Mr. PRICE, if he takes the field, will "go in to win."

MOSBY spoke at a political meeting in Warrenton, Va., on the 22d inst., and in the course of his remarks said: "New I happen to know something about WELLS. He was Provost-Marshal of Alexandria during the time when I was conducting military operations in this county. And I tell you that he never once showed his face outside the stockade. If he had, I would have saved our people all the trouble they have had with him as Governor of Virginia."

Of General CHAMBERLAIN, who has been nominated for his fourth term as Governor of Maine, the Portland Press says: "Whatever by pen and tongue, by judicious advice and bigger example, could be [illegible] morality, liberal and [illegible] crime, to promote [illegible] the productive [illegible] of the State, he has done. [illegible] conviction that he is doing the very best he can under the circumstances. Movements of Ex-President Johnson.

From the Knoxville (Tenn.) Press & Herald, June 25.

Mr. JOHNSON, to-day, will start from Greeneville to Washington. He goes to attend the Commencement exercises at Georgetown College, at which his youngest son is a student. He will not be absent from the State for a long period, and the people may rest assured that when he returns, his voice will be again heard in behalf of popular liberty.

Jubal A. Early on Virginia Politics.

To the Editors of the Lynchburg News:

FRANKLIN COURT-HOUSE, June 17, 1869.

I observe in your paper of the 14th a paragraph stating that I "have taken the stump for WALKER and against the Constitution." This does not correctly represent my position, and though my individual views are of little consequence to the public, yet, as I do not wish to be misunderstood by any, I take occasion to place myself right. At the last term of Franklin County Court, after Colonel MARTIN, of Henry, had made a speech, a portion of my old friends called upon me, and in response I made some remarks expressive of my views of the duty of Virginians in the approaching election. Regarding the instrument so anomalously propounded to the people of Virginia as a State Constitution by the recent proclamation of the President of the United States as, in its origin, its principles, its details, and its mode of submission, degrading to the State, destructive of its honor and interests, and subversive of all semblance of State rights, I advised the people of my native county to cast their votes against it, either as a whole or in broken dose. I told them, however, that it was not improbable that by reason of what I regarded as the unwise counsel of some of our public men the instrument would be palmed upon us either with or without the disfranchising clauses, and as, by the action of a convention recently held in Richmond, the Conservative candidates had been withdrawn, thus narrowing the contest for Governor to a choice between two Northern men who had been nominated by their respective wings of the Republican Party, and as the infamy of WELLS' character, public and private, had been fully developed and established, I advised them to cast their votes for WALKER, as a choice of evils, upon the chance of his proving better than his opponent, if for no other reason. I do not think this can be said to be "taking the stump for WALKER." The whole ticket, from its head to its tail, is objectionable and offensive to me, and the fault is not by any means the least offensive part. Dire necessity alone could induce me to urge any one to give his support to such a ticket, or any part of it. Very respectfully yours,

J. A. EARLY.

Negro Eligibility to Office in Georgia.

The Macon Telegraph, a leading Democratic paper in Georgia, frankly concedes that, by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the State, negroes are just as eligible to all civil offices as whites. In concluding an article upon the subject it says:

No well-informed man can have a doubt that the Federal Government is determined to resent the negroes in the Legislature at all hazards, and that all our opposition will be futile. The refusal of the Legislature to respect this decision of the

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

For two months past country sales have been very brisk and extensive, greater than during any previous year, and have attracted the attention of all classes of our citizens. An immense amount of property, improved and unimproved, desirable and not desirable, has changed hands, a great number of rural homes have been secured by persons of moderate means, who until now have lived in hired tenements, and a healthy excitement has existed, which to the slow-going, old-fashioned real estate operators, has been almost as much a terror as a wonder. They foresaw ruin in a dozen different guises, and predicted terrible disasters weekly; but now the season has nearly drawn to a close, it has been very prosperous and pleasant, hundreds of families have exchanged crowded, uncomfortable apartments, impure air, unpleasant neighbors and the hundred little annoyances which surround a poor man in the city, for comfortable, roomy, home-like little cottages, a pure sweet atmosphere, and a roof sheltering none but those belonging to them. They have hidden landlords good-bye, and become landowners themselves. The first of May is no longer a bugbear to them, and they can look upon a moving-cart, even during the latter days of April, with a supreme indifference, as surprising as it is delightful to them. The method of selling has been a very excellent one, permitting both man and wife to visit the various pieces of property free of expense, enabling them to judge for themselves whether it exactly suited their ideas, was sufficiently convenient, in good neighborhood, &c., &c.; and providing good lunches that they might return to the City in good humor, with full stomachs and as pleasant recollections of the sale as their anticipations had been. The results have been good. Everything which offers inducement to young heads of families to associate, opportunities to improve their condition, and chances to become substantial members of society, is a public benefit. The young men of the country must make its future, and every laudable ambition they possess should be encouraged by all public-spirited men. The desire to own a home is natural to every newly-married man, and to every father of a family; it is a creditable one too, and worthy to be cherished. The opportunity to realize this wish is eagerly embraced, and the man finding a home within his reach almost unconsciously commences economizing, dropping his foolish or extravagant habits, if he has any, saving a penny here and a trifle there, that he may in after years sit under the shade of his own vine and fig tree, with his little ones around him, happy and contented. He naturally shuns evil company, rejoices in all that makes his home bright and cheerful, and becomes a good, responsible, desirable citizen. Great numbers of such persons have during the past few weeks secured homes; hundreds who unsettled but a few months ago, have now an object in view and something to work for, and out-of-town sales have been justly popular, but now it is about time to end them until Summer has passed. The weather is too hot to render traveling about the country in hot, dusty cars very comfortable, and the demand is, for the time being, about satisfied. During the coming week or ten days, a number of sales will be made, some of very convenient and desirable property, and the chances are that for that length of time public interest will continue, and the attendance be good; but, after that, it seems scarcely advisable to have any more such sales until Fall. After the middle of next month the people will nearly all have completed their arrangements for the Summer, the weather will be so hot that they will scarcely remain out in the sun, or even under a tent, to purchase land, and it will be very difficult to get a respectable crowd together. It will, undoubtedly, therefore be best to take a rest now and perfect arrangements for a brisk Fall season, rather than drag on through the Summer months, tiring people out and surfeiting them, so that they will care but little for the large sales yet to be made. Give them a brief respite now, and next September or October, when the weather is again cool, and the country fresh and inviting, they will assemble together again, as eager to own and as ready to purchase as they were when the season now about closing commenced.

On Saturday Messrs. MULLER, WILKINS & CO. had a very large and successful sale of Westchester County property. Perhaps five hundred persons attended, and they were of an excellent class. The lands were fully up to the description given of them, and the crowd were in a good buying humor. Two fine lunches were served, after which the sale commenced. The bidding was brisk to the close. A large part of the property was disposed of at fair prices, after which, owing to the lateness of the hour, it was thought advisable to adjourn the sale. Due notice will be given in our advertising columns of the day when it will be resumed.

To-day no sales will be made, to-morrow three large ones will take place, viz.:

At Rahway, N. J., Messrs. JOHNSON & MILLER will dispose of 250 choice lots, located in the first ward of that city. Rahway is one of the old-established and most delightful cities in New-Jersey. Situated on a small river bearing its name, about four miles from its entrance into Staten Island Sound, and at the head of tide-water, its salubrity is beyond question. Its banks gently slope toward the river, forming an unsurpassed system of natural drainage. The expense of drainage is very light, the natural position of the ground being slightly altered for that purpose. The city is very convenient to New-York, and has constant communication by thirty-four daily trains over the New-Jersey Railroad. It has extensive manufacturing interests, the leading streets are flagged and the main thoroughfares paved with Belgian pavement. It is thoroughly sewered, has twelve churches, a number of excellent schools, and population of about 12,000. The terms of sale are liberal, two-thirds of the purchase-money may remain on bond and mortgage. The established reputation of the auctioneers who have the sale in charge is a guarantee of its fairness, and judging by the excellent and bountiful lunches and the perfect arrangements which have characterized their previous sales, the public are warranted in expecting a fine time at this. The customary precaution against disreputable characters will be taken. Tickets may be had of Messrs. JOHNSON & MILLER, No. 26 Nassau-street, or of GEORGE R. JACQUES, Esq., No. 208 Broadway, New-York.

The same day Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, Jr. & BRO., will sell a desirable farm at Plainfield, N. J., situated on stage road, in two parcels, to wit: Sixty acres in good state of cultivation, with a front on two roads; large dwelling, containing fourteen rooms, ice-house and other buildings. Also forty acres in good state of cultivation, fronting on two roads; large barn, four stalls; ten acres wood. The above will be sold separate or together. Should the weather be unfavorable, the sale will take place on the next fair day. Maps and particulars at auctioneer's office, No. 26 Pine-street.

The same day Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO. have a positive sale of 128 ville sites in the City of Plainfield, N. J., adjoining Hyde Park, on Pemberton, Central, Lane and Field avenues, and adjoining streets, sixty-five minutes from Wall-street, New-York. These plots will be sold by auction upon the ground, rain or shine; the land is a sandy loam and not muddy after a rain. It is the most elevated land on the plain. The avenues and streets are regularly graded and laid out. It is beautifully situated, having all the comforts of gas, water, accessibility to the City, with pure mountain air, fine drives and healthiness of the country. Special train leaves foot of Liberty-street at 11 A. M. Lunch, &c., on the arrival of the train. For free passes, maps and particulars, apply to the auctioneers, No. 77 Cedar-street, or to D. C. HYDE, Nos. 4 and 6 Pine-street.

Said bonds have been issued by the City for the purpose of providing means to redeem the Family Aid Fund Bonds of the City of New-York, due Nov. 1; that portion of the county debt, due Nov. 1, and the quota of the State tax, payable in 1869, and the expense of said debt, chargeable to the County of New-York during the present year.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

Rev. Dr. H. D. Northrop on the Character of the Late Henry J. Raymond.

A sermon was preached yesterday morning in the Twenty-third-street Presbyterian Church, by Rev. Dr. H. D. NORTHROP, upon the text of "One dieth in his full strength," taken from the twenty-first Job, twenty-third verse. Public men, said the speaker, are in a certain sense a public possession. Their life is not a thing for private interpretation; their deaths have an influence felt beyond their own domestic circles. When they fall, like the tall cedars of the forest, the distant glens and hills echo with the sound, and the shock vibrates far and near. When a man prominent in the community, holding a place of influence and responsibility, is removed, and we consider the event, we are dealing with what may properly be called our own. In belonging to the public he belonged to us, and it has always been considered the prerogative and privilege of the pulpit to take notice of the departure of such, and draw therefrom suitable lessons and admonitions. There has seldom been in this City a more profound impression caused by death, or a more universal demonstration of respect and sympathy occasioned thereby, than that witnessed during the past week. It is because I believe that the voice of Providence has been preached by this event, that I thought best to present this morning some considerations suggested by the sudden death of one so widely known among us. Death is not necessarily a gloomy theme, but whether circumstances make it glorious or sorrowful, it is its own vindicator. Certainly no subject which is so hackneyed can be said to lack in importance, and we are bound to hear its warning when it speaks. I observe that there is a great deal of practical skepticism concerning this whole subject. When a man lives day by day, as if there were no God, when he is disobedient to moral laws, careless about his manifest defying destiny and putting his immortality into the present moment, we say that, practically, he is an atheist. Banish Deity, and leave the heaven of heavens a blank, and that man's life would not be more godless than now. No Epicurus, reveling in the absurdities of Atheistic philosophy, and ascribing all things to chance, would sink lower in the scale of moral character than one who believed abstractly in a Supreme Being, but admits no such thing as obligation to obey his requirements. A man may as well say that he does not believe in a God at all, as to say that he does, and stop there. Knowing that there is a Deity, and yet living as if there were none, is the most hopeless phase of atheism. In like manner, knowing that you must die, and yet living as if this were your everlasting home, puts you within the pale of the most absurd skepticism respecting death. This would not appear strange, if there were any doubt respecting its certainty. If but one man out of a hundred were taken, it would be much more reasonable to shelve the matter in expectation of an escape; but when the other ninety-nine are sure to be taken, a disbelief in death is nothing less than folly. The fact is we are busy with life, and we are not busy with death. That is postponed to a distant future. Men should doubtless be busy with life, but to be so in the right manner is to keep constantly in readiness for the end of life. Notwithstanding the practical skepticism respecting death, it advances constantly to the fatal work, and nothing is more inexorable in its character. It is a reaper that cuts whatever stands in its way. What man, wielding a sickle, stands in blade in behalf of justice and humanity, that he may not fall before the spear of this Etheriel? What man is so great in the nation, so influential in society, so responsible in his position, that he may not, like the Prophet of Horeb, drop his mantle in the hands of his successors? The circumstances under which death frequently comes are calculated to startle men, and arouse them from indifference upon their chief concerns. The suddenness with which men are sometimes cut down, comes like a thunder-clap, and the hurrying crowd, stupefied and goddy, pause a moment to consider. Dr. DUFFIELD, of Detroit, while welcoming the delegates to the Young Men's Christian Association Convention in that city, paused at the end of one of his eloquent sentences, and died. GEORGE WHITFIELD stood on the stairs leading to his chamber one night, holding a lighted candle in his hand, and preaching to the people who thronged the house, and then went to his room for the last time. Such dispensations teach their own lesson. It would seem as if God were bent upon making us realize our mortality, and the uncertain character of that flimsy thing which we call life. An especially profound impression is often produced by the character and position of the one who is suddenly removed. When HAMILTON was shot by BURR on the heights yonder, that can almost be seen on leaving these doors, the public mind was profoundly moved. This was true likewise when HARRISON died, after having occupied the Presidential chair but a month. But more especially was the nation thrilled by Mr. LINCOLN'S sudden death, the preserver of his country as WASHINGTON was its founder. And now, lately again, death has chosen a conspicuous mark. Mr. RAYMOND was a distinguished journalist, and has been pronounced one of the first in the country. He had been a high officer in his native State, and a representative at Washington. Extensively known in political life, and recognized as a leader by many men, his influence was widely felt, and the tidings of his death have reached all classes in the community. It is not too much to say that by the sudden stroke which has removed him, Providence is speaking loudly to his own business and political associates, and to the entire nation. I wish you to mark some of those qualities and achievements which make a man outlive death. There are some who are gone, and yet are not gone. They are dead, and yet alive. They are silent, and yet they speak. They are entombed, and yet they walk the earth in all the majesty of conquerors. Their hands are folded to rest, and yet the temple on which they wrought stands in undiminished strength and beauty. It is given to some men to exert their personality upon their own and after ages. Of those two thousand clergymen who were ejected from the English Church in 1662 for non-conformity, only a few stand out prominently as leaders, sufferers and martyrs. But there is not one of Christ's ministers to-day, in that he helped to purchase liberties which lay among the dearest possessions of the Church. The most harmless thing then, to some men, is death. They live right on! They never die. The men, the mechanical appliances, by which the old pyramids of Egypt were built 4,000 years ago, are gone. The work is left. Like this is the indestructible character of virtue and its achievements. Still further, when a man has been closely identified with any great cause which looks toward the welfare of a nation, or of any particular class in a community, he must of necessity outlive the grave. There is no death for the principles of national justice and liberty, and he who advocates them will leave behind him a memory ever green. I believe that CLARKSON and WILBERFORCE and LINCOLN, those three stars in the firmament of history, shining with the promise of liberty, are as bright to-day as they ever were. I will not call them dead. The million whom they blessed and elevated, will not let them die. There is many a name associated with our late national struggle which will be as imperishable as the country's birthright, purchased with their toils, their sufferings or their blood. In this galaxy of luminaries I place, where the nation has placed it already, the name of him for whom the people mourn. No one ever doubted Mr. RAYMOND'S devotion to his own convictions, and these were immutably on the side of national righteousness and unity. When others faltered, he was firm. He believed there was only one way of settling the great dispute. On many questions of the day his position was not so forward as that of some, but he ever looked in the right direction, and was in his ideas and sentiments the avowed leader of not a few. That there should be a widely circulated journal, correct in its purpose, and ever true to that purpose, influential for good, as a press actuated by moral principle ever must be, manifestly above passion or prejudice, and never intentionally doing a mean thing; aiding the cause of truth and that of humanity with a faith that never doubted, and an arm that never failed—that such there should be the promoter and originator of this is worthy of grateful mention in every pulpit in the land. His eulogy has already been written by many pens, and pronounced by many tongues. The dispensation which removed him seems to be one not merely heard of but felt. It is some mitigation of the loss, to reflect that he has lived to hear his testimony, to see the banner behind which he fought, in the ascendant, to utter noble words, when such were precious, because needed. Sudden as was his call, it did not find him with his work undone. The broken sentence found lying in his desk, which was the last he ever penned, may symbolize his life, broken in the fullness of his strength, but not his influence. He lives in what he has done and helped others to do. Requiescat in pace.

Rev. W. P. Corbit on Methodist Lay Representation.

Rev. WILLIAM P. CORBIT preached an effective sermon on the subject of "Lay Delegations" in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in John-street, last evening.

As the advocates of lay representation in the chief councils of the Church based their claims on the ground of right and expediency, he proposed to consider their position. In the first place, have they any Scriptural right to such representation? The Scriptures nowhere lay down any distinctive form of church organization, and, therefore, every denomination has a right to prescribe its own forms. If other churches are blessed to have laymen represented in their deliberations, the Methodist Church on the same ground of option can exclude laymen. No argument pro or con on the subject can be derived from the teachings of Christ. Next, have they any natural right? On this point the preacher maintained that Church and civil Governments were unlike in origin, authority and design, and what might be a natural right in the latter was not necessarily so in the former. The claims were different. As for the ground of expediency, what wrong do laymen suppose to effect? Do they wish to change articles of religion or Church discipline? Certainly not, he advanced, and says that he is able to expect some money in making them known and means to do it.

Fifth-Avenue Baptist Church—Anniversary of the Sunday-School Missionary Society.

The Sunday School Missionary Society of the Fifth-avenue Baptist Church (Dr. ARMITAGE'S) held their anniversary services in the church last evening.

This Society was organized one year ago, with a view to more efficient service in the work of local missions, and according to the annual report of the Secretary, has fully met the anticipations of its projectors. More than 1,000 books have been donated to other societies, $2,500 was collected, $1,000 of which was expended during the year, mostly in charity. The contributions made last evening for the present year amounted to nearly $600 aside from the contributions of the congregation. The exercises consisted of singing and prayer, together with appropriate addresses by Rev. THOMAS ARMITAGE, D. D., and Rev. HYATT SMITH. Both speakers discoursed in their happiest vein, words of congratulation for the past and encouragement for the future. The services were concluded by the benediction and a voluntary on the organ by J. W. ROON. The officers of the Society selected for the year 1869 are: R. P. JUNSON, President; R. R. GAY, Vice-President; J. H. BOGGS, Secretary, and J. E. THORNTON, Treasurer.

Presbyterianism an Arrested Development and Not a Failure.

At the Church of the Saviour, (Unitarian,) Pierrepont-street, yesterday morning, the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Mr. CUTLER, of Charleston, S. C., who preached a vigorous sermon on the coming of Christ's kingdom. There was a numerous and attentive congregation, notwithstanding the intense sultriness of the weather. At the commencement of his discourse Mr. CUTLER remarked that there are some people who say that Christianity lacks divinity, its progress is so slow; that it is too much a matter of church upholstery and ecclesiastical millinery, of bell-ringing, of painted vestments, of dogmatism and strife. And yet Christianity follows the law of all truth. The slowness of its progress is but a battling of the way to success. Truth comes upon us like the step of Spring. A while ago we saw nothing but withered forms and wasted leaves. We looked again, and the mosses, and the daffodils, and the roses were in sweetest bloom; the trees had put forth their leaves, and green life came tingling through all their boughs. The glories of Spring have come forth without observation, and the Kingdom of God is coming in the same way. It has indeed been declared from a Presbyterian pulpit that Protestantism is a failure—and so, in some respects, it is to be feared it is; though it is not a failure for the reasons given by those who now pronounce against it, but simply because it is an arrested development; because Protestants have not had the courage to carry out the principle of private judgment. That is the reason that Protestantism fails, if it does fail. Roman Catholicism was declared to be a decided failure, while at the same time its system of government, it must be allowed, was a magnificent success.

PROBABLE MURDER.

A Tenement-House Tragedy—Brutal Assault by a Man and Woman.

About 11 o'clock on Saturday evening the neighborhood of Forty-seventh-street and First-avenue was startled by the sounds of an angry altercation, proceeding from the tenement-house at No. 357 East Forty-seventh-street. The house is used both as a boarding and tenement house, and is occupied by Germans, French and Irish, who live on separate floors. Living in one of the rooms on the third floor is a family by the name of SULLIVAN, who appear to have been greatly addicted to drink. On Saturday evening three persons were assembled in the room, namely, Mrs. ELLEN JOHN BALDWIN and Mrs. ELLEN SULLIVAN, wife of PATRICK SULLIVAN, the tenant. While they were engaged in drinking the woman suddenly accused CONNOR of insulting her, at the same time making a fierce onslaught on him with her hands. BALDWIN immediately came to her assistance, and assailed CONNOR with a knife, stabbing him in the abdomen near the navel, and inflicting a wound about an inch deep, from which the intestines protruded. It was subsequently discovered that part of the smaller intestines had been cut. The injured man said that Mrs. SULLIVAN held him back while BALDWIN performed the stabbing. After the act he was pitched out of the room and then kicked down stairs. BALDWIN making the remark, "I think he is fixed now." CONNOR was found on the foot of the stairs by some neighbors in the house, bleeding profusely from his wounds and with his face and head badly bruised. He was conveyed to his residence, at No. 330 East Forty-eighth-street, where he received medical treatment. Yesterday afternoon he was visited by Deputy Coroner WOODWARD, BEACH, who found him in a very feeble and dying condition. His ante-mortem examination was taken by Coroner KENNAN, who committed BALDWIN to prison. Mrs. SULLIVAN was discharged.

Alleged Inhuman Treatment of a Child.

Justice WARREN issued a warrant on Saturday night for the arrest of Mr. and Mrs. CRANE, of Second-street, Jersey City, for the brutal and inhuman treatment of a little girl, 7 years of age, the daughter of Mr. CRANE and the stepdaughter of Mrs. CRANE. Mr. WM. CRANE, the father of the girl, is in the employ of his father and brother, who run "Crane's Paterson Express." The neighbors all unite in testifying to the cruel treatment not only of the girl, but of a little boy who some time since ran away from home, and who is now living with some relatives in the country. Upon the case being brought before Justice WARREN, Mrs. THOMPSON deposed that to her certain knowledge Mrs. CRANE tied the child frequently around the waist with a clothes-line, fastening her in that position from 9 o'clock in the morning until 5 in the afternoon without food or water. Mrs. THOMPSON had also frequently, if not daily, heard the child crying from hunger, thirst and beating, and had seen CRANE knock the girl down and kick her in the yard. She had also seen marks and bruises, the result of Mr. and Mrs. CRANE'S brutality. Neighbors also testified that the child was covered with sores and bruises, and had often been fed by them, as she could get nothing to eat at home. The feeling against the cruel parents in the neighborhood was so strong that they did not dare to show themselves on Saturday, and could not be arrested until late at night. The alleged victim has been missing for the last two days, and is supposed to be under the protection of some relatives. The defendants were admitted to bail.

Boiler Explosion in Newark—One Man Killed, Another Severely Injured, and Two Men Slightly Injured.

A large number of Newarkers visited, yesterday, the scene of the boiler explosion which took place on Saturday evening, on board a tug boat lying at HUGHES & PHILIPS' wharf, Passaic River. The vessel was at the bottom of the river, and her boiler was lying some thirty feet distance, on the wharf, where it had been thrown by the force of the explosion. At the time of the accident the boat contained half a dozen young men, employes of Messrs. HUGHES & PHILIPS, machinists. The party intended taking an excursion trip up the river, and all hands were aboard and everything ready, when the disaster occurred. The steamer was about 50 feet long; she had not been used for a considerable time; her boiler was an old affair which had not been in use for over a year. It was, however, considered quite sound and safe. What the cause of the explosion was has not been ascertained. The boiler was thrown fifteen thirty feet high, and from the concussion, or some other cause not known, the keel of the boat was driven out, and the vessel sunk in deep water. EDWARD HIRE was blown in the air as high as the boiler went, and was subsequently recovered in the river. He had an arm broken, and the physicians are in doubt whether his death was the result of the concussion or drowning. MERKER was severely injured, but it is believed not fatally. The other men escaped with a few slight bruises. In consequence of the frequency of boiler explosions recently in this State, Coroner LANG has determined to hold an inquest on Thursday next, when it is expected any mystery connected with the occurrence will be cleared up.

Exploits of a Gang of Robbers.

As JAMES O'DONNELL was proceeding to his home in a considerably intoxicated condition early yesterday morning, he was met by a party of five men in Seventh-avenue, who boldly attacked him, throwing him down and divesting him of his coat, vest and boots, besides taking a small amount of money which he had in his possession. The same gang also gave a German named HERMAN WALTMAN similar treatment, robbing him of his wearing apparel and so on. Officers DAVIS, MCLAUGHLIN and KENNEDY, of the Twenty-second Precinct, arrested JAMES MALONE, CHRISTOPHER FERRY, MARTIN BROWN, JOHN O. MARTINSON and JOHN MCCLOSKEY, (all hackmen, with the exception of the first-named,) who were identified as the robbers. They were held for trial.

Youthful Burglars.

Yesterday afternoon some small boys were seen to enter the basement of CURRIER & IVES' stationery store, in Nassau-street, opposite the TIMES Building. Suspicion being aroused, detective officers were notified, who at once broke in a window over the door and entered the store. After considerable search they found two small boys hidden away in a closet. The money till had been broken into, and some change was found on the floor. The little urchins were taken to the Beekman-street Police Station, where they said that two larger boys had gone in with them, but had escaped with some money. Their names were JOHN DUGAN and RICHARD GORDON, aged 10 and 12 years. They entered the basement by squeezing through the iron bars of the window.

THE SOUTH SIDE RAILROAD.

A Quarrel of a Mile of Its Track Torn Up.

In the TIMES of Saturday we gave an account of the completion of the Rockaway Branch of the South Side Railroad by the termination of the powers of the injunction obtained against it by PATRICK MCMANUS about one month ago. The injunction expired at 11 o'clock on Friday, and in one hour thereafter the track was laid through MCMANUS' premises and a train run over it. This greatly incensed the occupant of the premises, and obtaining assistance he yesterday afternoon tore up every rail laid, and so completely destroyed the work performed by the railroad hands as to render its re-performance an absolute necessity. It is understood that an application for arrest will be made to-day, and a sharp legal litigation is imminent.

The Strange Case in the Juvenile Asylum.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

NO. 42 FIFTH-AVENUE, NEW-YORK, Friday, June 25, 1869.

Mr. A. R. WETMORE, the excellent and humane President of the Juvenile Asylum, has given me an opportunity to examine personally the child MARY LEE, who was injured in attempting to escape from the House of Reception for that institution at No. 81 West Thirteenth-street. A thorough inquiry into the statements made to me by the Police officer convinces me that there was entire misapprehension of facts published, and, of necessity, the inferences that may be drawn from them by the public.

In the first place, the child did not jump from the third or fourth story. She rose at 4 o'clock, without any fear of punishment or any aberration of mind from illness or fright, abstracted four shawls from the clothes-press and threw them on the sidewalk, and then got out of the window of the second story, (the dormitory,) stood upon the broad ledge that caps the street door and runs completely across the building, designing doubtless to let herself drop to the sidewalk, only sixteen feet below, and thus escape with her booty. The cry of distress was that of the young woman who was on the watch, and who discovered the child's absence from her bed and gave the alarm; it was uttered when the child was obliged to quit her hold on the ledge, and the Warden could not possibly prevent it, as the child hung dangling by one hand, which was all that could be seen from the room where she stood. The young girl was only 12 years of age, and was committed by her own mother for persistent theft both at home and from the neighbors. Her mother convicted her repeatedly, urgently with me, and is tenderly cared for by the resident physician, Dr. J. D. BROOKS, and the Matron, Mrs. MARY L. WRIGHT, who gave me every facility for examining and questioning the poor child.

I hope I need not add the pleasure it gives me to be made the medium of rectifying an error which might bring into disrepute this excellent charity. It was mainly the result of the labors of a very dear personal friend now deceased, and is now continued. I am convinced by personal inspection, by heads and hearts capable of their high trust. Nothing is more revolting to me as a man and physician, and nothing more subversive of the object of such a charity, than cruelty from those to whom children look for protection, and I am rejoiced to know there was none in this instance, as no punishments are ever allowed by subordinates.

A Curious and Interesting Will Case—A Large Amount of Property Involved.

Correspondence of the Detroit Advertiser.

MARSHALL, Mich., Wednesday, June 23.

A case of unusual interest, and of which a large amount of property is involved, is now pending in our County. In 1836, JOSEPH SIBLEY, an old resident of this place, and a man of wealth, formed a partnership with HORACE J. PERRIN, also of this place, in the banking and milling business, and general speculation. In September, 1864, Mr. SIBLEY died, the partnership having not yet expired. He left but one heir, a son then 18 years of age. He left to his widow, in lieu of dower, the sum of $20,000 in addition to her homestead, and, with the exception of two or three small legacies, bequeathed the whole remaining portion of his estate to FRANCIS M. SIBLEY, his son. He, however, nominated five executors, who were to have the entire charge of the estate. They were directed to pay to his principal legatee the sum of $1,000 per year until he should reach the age of 22, when he was to have $2,000 and $1,000 per year until he should be 25, when, if in the opinion of his executors, he would not be squandering or waste it, he should receive the $2,000 and $1,000 per year until 30, when he was to have $12,000 if thought by his executors competent to manage it, and these yearly payments to continue until, in the opinion of his executors, he should be competent of exclusive discretion to take charge of the estate, they were to give him the whole. If not, they were directed so retain it for his heirs, and if he should die without issue, then to the collateral heirs of the testator. Mr. H. J. PERRIN was named as one of these executors, and was the only one of the number who qualified or ever acted. He proceeded with the settlement of the estate, set apart the legacy, &c., but having quarreled with young SIBLEY, and that gentleman not feeling satisfied with the management of the estate, filed a bill in chancery against the executor, setting forth that M. PERRIN had in his hands of partnership property about $250,000, of which $150,000 belonged to him as the heir and legatee of his father, and asking the Court to decree that an account be taken and PERRIN be compelled to pay over; also setting forth that, inasmuch as but one of the five executors had qualified or acted, and as the estate had been substantially settled, he, the complainant, was entitled at once to come into possession of the whole the trust was a personal one; that, unless all acted, the action of the balance would not be valid and that he was at once entitled to the estate and discharged from the discretionary power of the executors. To this the defendant demurred, alleging a complete remedy at law, and that, if the Court should sustain the bill, the Probate Court alone had jurisdiction to settle the matter, and that the Court of Chancery would only interfere to aid the Probate Court in some collateral matter, and as to the second part of the bill the defendant takes issue and claims that, as a matter of law, one executor out of a number may act; that where the trust is coupled with an interest, and when a trust is created bearing a discretionary power as to the execution, one might execute it, distinguishing this case from a mere naked trust. The argument was heard on the demurrer on Saturday before Judge WOODBURY in Chambers. The questions were very ably argued by W. WOODBRIDGE, of Detroit, for the complainant, and by D. D. HUGHES, of this city, in support of the demurrer. A decision has not yet been given.

Sagacity and Sympathy of a Horse.

From the Indianapolis Journal, June 19.

Yesterday morning a blind horse wandered into the river near the National Road Bridge, and getting beyond his depth swam around in a circle in his efforts to find his way out. His distress attracted the attention of a boy who was on the bank who instantly went to his assistance. He first went to the water's edge and attempted to direct the blind horse by neighing, but finding this proceeding ineffectual, he boldly took to the water and swam to relief. After swimming around with him for nearly a quarter of an hour, he finally got the blind horse to understand his good intentions, and in what direction the land lay and the two horses came to shore side by side amid the cheers of upward of 100 persons, who were interested spectators of the scene.
